MANY are the works of human induſtry, which to begin and finiſh are hardly granted to the ſame man. He that undertakes to compile a Dictionary, undertakes that, which, if it comprehends the full extent of his deſign, he knows himſelf unable to perform. Yet his labours, though deficient, may be uſeful, and with the hope of this inferiour praiſe, he muſt incite his activity, and ſolace his wearineſs.

Perfection is unattainable, but nearer and nearer approaches may be made; and finding my Dictionary about to be reprinted, I have endeavoured, by a reviſal, to make it leſs reprehenſible. I will not deny that I found many parts requiring emendation, and many more capable of improvement. Many faults I have corrected, ſome ſuperfluities I have taken away, and ſome deficiencies I have ſupplied. I have methodiſed ſome parts that were diſordered, and illuminated ſome that were obſcure. Yet the changes or additions bear a very ſmall proportion to the whole. The critick will now have leſs to object, but the ſtudent who has bought any of the former copies, needs not repent; he will not, without nice collation, perceive how they differ, and uſefulneſs ſeldom depends upon little things.

For negligence or deficience, I have perhaps not need of more apology than the nature of the work will furniſh; I have left that inaccurate which never was made exact, and that imperfect which never was completed.

S. JOHNSON.

P R E F A C E.

IT is the fate of thoſe who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the proſpect of good; to be expoſed to cenſure, without hope of praiſe; to be diſgraced by miſcarriage, or puniſhed for neglect, where ſucceſs would have been without applauſe, and diligence without reward.

Among theſe unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have conſidered, not as the pupil, but the ſlave of ſcience, the pionier of literature, doomed only to remove rubbiſh and clear obſtructions from the paths through which Learning and Genius preſs forward to conqueſt and glory, without beſtowing a ſmile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progreſs. Every other authour may aſpire to praiſe; the lexicographer can only hope to eſcape reproach, and even this negative recompenſe has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithſtanding this diſcouragement, attempted a dictionary of the Engliſh language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every ſpecies of literature, has itſelf been hitherto neglected; ſuffered to ſpread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance; reſigned to the tyranny of time and faſhion; and expoſed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the firſt ſurvey of my undertaking, I found our ſpeech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be diſentangled, and confuſion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundleſs variety, without any eſtabliſhed principle of ſelection; adulterations were to be detected, without a ſettled teſt of purity; and modes of expreſſion to be rejected or received, without the ſuffrages of any writers of claſſical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no aſſiſtance but from general grammar, I applied myſelf to the peruſal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of uſe to aſcertain or illuſtrate any word, or phraſe, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, eſtabliſhing to myſelf in the progreſs of the work, ſuch rules as experience and analogy ſuggeſted to me; experience, which practice and obſervation were continually increaſing; and analogy, which, though in ſome words obſcure, was evident in others.

In adjuſting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unſettled and fortuitous, I found it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh thoſe irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themſelves once unneceſſary, muſt be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regiſtered, that they may not be increaſed, and aſcertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewiſe its improprieties and abſurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proſcribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of neceſſary or common uſe were ſpoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any viſible ſigns, muſt have been ſpoken with great diverſity, as we now obſerve thoſe who cannot read to catch ſounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was firſt reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to expreſs, as he could, the ſounds which he was accuſtomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing ſuch words as were already vitiated in ſpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muſt have been vague and unſettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the ſame ſound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation ariſe in a great part the various dialects of the ſame country, which will always be obſerved to grow fewer, and leſs different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary repreſentation of ſounds by letters, proceeds that diverſity of ſpelling obſervable in the Saxon remains, and I ſuppoſe in the firſt books of every nation, which perplexes or deſtroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, that, being once incorporated, can never be afterward diſmiſſed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, ſtrength from ſtrong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth; Quid te exempta juvat ſpinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is moſt frequent in the vowels, which are ſo capriciouſly pronounced, and ſo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologiſts, little regard is to be ſhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but ſpots of barbarity impreſſed ſo deep in the Engliſh language, that criticiſm can never waſh them away: theſe, therefore, muſt be permitted to remain untouched; but many words have likewiſe been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and ſome ſtill continue to be variouſly written, as authours differ in their care or ſkill: of theſe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always conſidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is choſen rather than intire, becauſe it paſſed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to ſay whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, ſince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin ſervice in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally ſupplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domeſtick uſe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to ſacrifice uniformity to cuſtom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberleſs majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; ſometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the ſame power are uſed indifferently without any diſcoverable reaſon of choice, as in choak, choke; ſoap, ſope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have ſometimes inſerted twice, that thoſe who ſearch for them under either form, may not ſearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of ſpelling by which it is inſerted in the ſeries of the dictionary, is to be conſidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often raſhly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every authour his own practice unmoleſted, that the reader may balance ſuffrages, and judge between us: but this queſtion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; ſome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on ſounds and derivations; ſome, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected thoſe in which our words are commonly to be ſought. Thus Hammond writes fecibleneſs for feaſibleneſs, becauſe I ſuppoſe he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and ſome words, ſuch as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final ſyllable, as one or another language is preſent to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without control, and vanity ſought praiſe by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a ſcholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among thoſe few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to thoſe, whoſe thoughts have been perhaps employed too anxiouſly on verbal ſingularities, not to diſturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been aſſerted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, ſays Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worſe to better. There is in conſtancy and ſtability a general and laſting advantage, which will always overbalance the ſlow improvements of gradual correction. Much leſs ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itſelf, and imitate thoſe changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in obſerving them.

This recommendation of ſteadineſs and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happineſs; or that truth may not be ſucceſsfully

taught by modes of ſpelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet ſo loſt in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the ſons of heaven. Language is only the inſtrument of ſcience, and words are but the ſigns of ideas: I wiſh, however, that the inſtrument might be leſs apt to decay, and that ſigns might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In ſettling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated ſyllable. It will ſometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the authour quoted, on a different ſyllable from that marked in the alphabetical ſeries; it is then to be underſtood, that cuſtom has varied, or that the authour has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are ſometimes given where the ſound of letters is irregular; and if they are ſometimes omitted, defect in ſuch minute obſervations will be more eaſily excuſed, than ſuperfluity.

In the inveſtigation both of the orthography and ſignification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was neceſſarily to be conſidered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any Engliſh root; thus circumſpect, circumvent, circumſtance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all thoſe that can be referred to any word in Engliſh of greater ſimplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy ſometimes needleſs; for who does not ſee that remoteneſs comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonſtrative from demonſtrate? but this grammatical exuberance the ſcheme of my work did not allow me to repreſs. It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the uſual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity muſt be preſerved in ſyſtematical works, though ſometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to inſert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, and though familiar to thoſe who have always uſed them, interrupt and embarraſs the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonick range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Moſt of our polyſyllables are Roman, and our words of one ſyllable are very often Teutonick.

In aſſigning the Roman original, it has perhaps ſometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and conſidering myſelf as employed only in the illuſtration of my own language, I have not been very careful to obſerve whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obſolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or uſurp their honours, but that I might ſpare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment. Of theſe, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to inſtructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of underſtanding. Junius was accurately ſkilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occaſional inſpection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other uſe than to ſhow him a track by which he may deviate from his purpoſe, to which Skinner always preſſes forward by the ſhorteſt way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety diſtracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently diſgraced by his abſurdities.

The votaries of the northern muſes will not perhaps eaſily reſtrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a diſadvantageous compariſon; but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of cenſoriouſneſs to charge that etymologiſt with want of judgment, who can ſeriouſly derive dream from drama, becauſe life is a drama, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, ſingle or ſolitary, who conſiders that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

* That I may not appear to have ſpoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here ſubjoined a few Specimens of his etymological extravagance.

PREFACE.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is ſo ſcanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonick the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inſerted Dutch or German ſubſtitutes, which I conſider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but ſiſters of the Engliſh.

The words which are repreſented as thus related by deſcent or cognation, do not always agree in ſenſe; for it is incident to words, as to their authours, to degenerate from their anceſtors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is ſufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the ſenſes of kindred words be found ſuch as may eaſily paſs into each other, or ſuch as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, ſo far as it is yet known, was eaſily found in the volumes where it is particularly and profeſſedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was ſoon adjuſted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a taſk of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhauſted, what was yet wanting muſt be ſought by fortuitous and unguided excurſions into books, and gleaned as induſtry ſhould find, or chance ſhould offer it, in the boundleſs chaos of a living ſpeech. My ſearch, however, has been either ſkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my deſign was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names: ſuch as Arian, Socinian, Calviniſt, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained thoſe of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received ſuch as could be found either in books of ſcience or technical dictionaries; and have often inſerted, from philoſophical writers, words which are ſupported perhaps only by a ſingle authority, and which being not admitted into general uſe, ſtand yet as candidates or probationers, and muſt depend for their adoption on the ſuffrage of futurity.

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonneſs, by compliance with faſhion or luſt of innovation, I have regiſtered as they occurred, though commonly only to cenſure them, and warn others againſt the folly of naturalizing uſeleſs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by deſign, merely becauſe they were unneceſſary or exuberant; but have received thoſe which by different writers have been differently formed, as viſcid, and viſcidity, viſcous, and viſcoſity.

Compounded or double words I have ſeldom noted, except when they obtain a ſignification different from that which the components have in their ſimple ſtate. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horſecourſer, require an explication; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, becauſe the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a conſtant and ſettled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in iſh, as greeniſh, bluiſh, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, ſubſtantives in neſs, as vileneſs, faultineſs, were leſs diligently ſought, and ſometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to inſert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offſprings of Engliſh roots, but becauſe their relation to the primitive being always the ſame, their ſignification cannot be miſtaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, ſuch as the keeping of the caſtle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illuſtrate the ſenſe of the verb, except when they ſignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an abſolute and abſtract ſignification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewiſe omitted, unleſs, by ſignifying rather habit or quality than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horſe, a horſe that can pace:

pace: theſe I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are theſe always inſerted, becauſe they are commonly to be underſtood, without any danger of miſtake, by conſulting the verb.

Obſolete words are admitted, when they are found in authours not obſolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deſerve revival.

As compoſition is one of the chief characteriſticks of a language, I have endeavoured to make ſome reparation for the univerſal negligence of my predeceſſors, by inſerting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. Theſe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that uſe and curioſity are here ſatisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply diſcovered.

Of ſome forms of compoſition, ſuch as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to ſignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becauſe the uſe of theſe particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is ſo little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occaſion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compoſition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which ariſes to foreigners the greateſt difficulty. We modify the ſignification of many words by a particle ſubjoined; as to come off, to eſcape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apoſtatize; to break off, to ſtop abruptly; to bear out, to juſtify; to fall in, to comply; to give over; to ceaſe; to ſet off, to embelliſh; to ſet in, to begin a continual tenour; to ſet out, to begin a courſe or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expreſſions of the ſame kind, of which ſome appear wildly irregular, being ſo far diſtant from the ſenſe of the ſimple words, that no ſagacity will be able to trace the ſteps by which they arrived at the preſent uſe. Theſe I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myſelf that the collection is complete, I believe I have ſo far aſſiſted the ſtudents of our language, that this kind of phraſeology will be no longer inſuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eaſily explained by compariſon with thoſe that may be found.

Many words yet ſtand ſupported only by the name of Bailey, Ainſworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries ſubjoined; of theſe I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of ſuch I have omitted many, becauſe I had never read them; and many I have inſerted, becauſe they may perhaps exiſt, though they have eſcaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet conſidered as reſting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I conſidered as uſeful, or know to be proper, though I could not at preſent ſupport them by authorities, I have ſuffered to ſtand upon my own atteſtation, claiming the ſame privilege with my predeceſſors of being ſometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus ſelected and diſpoſed, are grammatically conſidered; they are referred to the different parts of ſpeech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illuſtrated by obſervations, not indeed of great or ſtriking importance, ſeparately conſidered, but neceſſary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by Engliſh grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity moſt frequently to faſten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to ſatisfy thoſe, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleaſed, ſince I have not always been able to ſatisfy myſelf. To interpret a language by itſelf is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by ſynonimes, becauſe the idea ſignified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphraſe, becauſe ſimple ideas cannot be deſcribed. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unſettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which ſuch notions are conveyed, or ſuch things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And ſuch is the fate of hapleſs lexicography, that not only darkneſs, but light, impedes and diſtreſſes it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illuſtrated. To explain, requires the uſe of terms leſs abſtruſe than that which is to be explained, and ſuch terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by ſuppoſing ſomething intuitively known, and evident without proof, ſo nothing can be defined but by the uſe of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the ſenſe is too ſubtle and evaneſcent to be fixed in a paraphraſe; ſuch are all thoſe which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are ſuffered to paſs for empty ſounds, of no other uſe than to fill a verſe, or to modulate a period, but which are eaſily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphaſis, though it be ſometimes ſuch as no other form of expreſſion can convey.

My labour has likewiſe been much increaſed by a claſs of verbs too frequent in the Engliſh language, of which the ſignification is ſo looſe and general, the uſe ſo vague and indeterminate, and the ſenſes detorted ſo widely from the firſt idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumſcribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of diſtinct and ſettled meaning; ſuch are bear, break, come, caſt, full, get, give, do, put, ſet, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of theſe the whole power is not accurately delivered, it muſt be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that ſpeaks it, theſe words are hourly ſhifting their relations, and can no more be aſcertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a ſtorm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with ſo great latitude, that they are not eaſily reducible under any regular ſcheme of explication: this difficulty is not leſs, nor perhaps greater, in Engliſh, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with ſucceſs; ſuch at leaſt as can be expected in a taſk, which no man, however learned or ſagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, becauſe I do not underſtand them; theſe might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not ſo far indulge my vanity as to decline this confeſſion: for when Tully owns himſelf ignorant whether leſſus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral ſong, or mourning garment; and Ariſtotle doubts whether οὔρευς, in the Iliad, ſignifies a mule, or muleteer, I may ſurely, without ſhame, leave ſome obſcurities to happier induſtry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, ſhould be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are ſeldom exactly ſynonymous; a new term was not introduced, but becauſe the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then neceſſary to uſe the proximate word, for the deficiency of ſingle terms can very ſeldom be ſupplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of ſuch mutilated interpretations, becauſe the ſenſe may eaſily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extenſive uſe, it was requiſite to mark the progreſs of its meaning, and ſhow by what gradations of intermediate ſenſe it has paſſed from its primitive to its remote and accidental ſignification; ſo that every foregoing explanation ſhould tend to that which follows, and the ſeries be regularly concatenated from the firſt notion to the laſt.

This is ſpecious, but not always practicable; kindred ſenſes may be ſo interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be diſentangled, nor any reaſon be aſſigned why one ſhould be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a conſecutive ſeries be formed of ſenſes in their nature collateral? The ſhades of meaning ſometimes paſs imperceptibly into each other; ſo that though on one ſide they apparently differ, yet it is impoſſible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the ſame race, though not exactly alike, are ſometimes ſo little different, that no words can expreſs the diſſimilitude, though the mind eaſily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and ſometimes there is ſuch a confuſion of acceptations, that diſcernment is wearied, and diſtinction puzzled, and perſeverance herſelf hurries to an end, by crowding together what ſhe cannot ſeparate.

Theſe complaints of difficulty will, by thoſe that have never conſidered words beyond their popular uſe, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his ſtudies by involution and obſcurity. But every art is obſcure to thoſe that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to thoſe who have joined philoſophy with grammar; and if I have not expreſſed them very clearly, it muſt be remembered that I am ſpeaking of that which words are inſufficient to explain.

The original ſenſe of words is often driven out of uſe by their metaphorical acceptations, yet muſt be inſerted for the ſake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is uſed for material heat, or whether flagrant, in Engliſh, ever ſignifies the ſame with burning; yet ſuch are the primitive ideas of theſe words, which are therefore ſet firſt, though without examples, that the figurative ſenſes may be commodiouſly deduced.

Such is the exuberance of ſignification which many words have obtained, that it was ſcarcely poſſible to collect all their ſenſes; ſometimes the meaning of derivatives muſt be ſought in the mother term, and ſometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be ſupplied in the train of derivation. In any caſe of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the ſame race; for ſome words are ſlightly paſſed over to avoid repetition, ſome admitted eaſier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better underſtood, as they are conſidered in greater variety of ſtructures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the ſame ſkill, or the ſame happineſs: things equally eaſy in themſelves, are not all equally eaſy to any ſingle mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to miſlead, nor obſcurity to confound him; and in a ſearch like this, many felicities of expreſſion will be caſually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many ſeeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus ſome explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hind, the female of the ſtag; ſtag, the male of the hind: ſometimes eaſier words are changed into harder, as burial into ſepulture or interment, drier into deſiccative, dryneſs into ſiccity or aridity, fit into paroxyſm; for the eaſieſt word, whatever it be, can never be tranſlated into one more eaſy. But eaſineſs and difficulty are merely relative, and if the preſent prevalence of our language ſhould invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be aſſiſted by thoſe words which now ſeem only to increaſe or produce obſcurity. For this reaſon I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER, to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of Engliſh may be aſſiſted by his own tongue.

The ſolution of all difficulties, and the ſupply of all defects, muſt be ſought in the examples, ſubjoined to the various ſenſes of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authours.

When firſt I collected theſe authorities, I was deſirous that every quotation ſhould be uſeful to ſome other end than the illuſtration of a word; I therefore extracted from philoſophers principles of ſcience; from hiſtorians remarkable facts; from chymiſts complete proceſſes; from divines ſtriking exhortations; and from poets beautiful deſcriptions. Such is deſign, while it is yet at a diſtance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wiſdom into an alphabetical ſeries, I ſoon diſcovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the ſtudent, and was forced to depart from my ſcheme of including all that was pleaſing or uſeful in Engliſh literature, and reduce my tranſcripts very often to cluſters of words, in which ſcarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the wearineſs of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some paſſages I have yet ſpared, which may relieve the labour of verbal ſearches, and interſperſe with verdure and flowers the duſty deſarts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be conſidered as conveying the ſentiments or doctrine of their authours; the word for the ſake of which they are inſerted, with all its appendant clauſes, has been carefully preſerved; but it may ſometimes happen, by haſty detruncation, that the general tendency of the ſentence may be changed: the divine may deſert his tenets, or the philoſopher his ſyſtem.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as maſters of elegance or models of ſtyle; but words muſt be ſought where they are uſed; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations ſerve no other purpoſe, than that of proving the bare exiſtence of words, and are therefore ſelected with leſs ſcrupulouſneſs than thoſe which are to teach their ſtructures and relations.

My purpoſe was to admit no teſtimony of living authours, that I might not be miſled by partiality, and that none of my cotemporaries might have reaſon to complain; nor have I departed from this reſolution, but when ſome performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory ſupplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderneſs of friendſhip, ſolicited admiſſion for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have ſtudiouſly endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the reſtoration, whoſe works I regard as the wells of Engliſh undefiled, as the pure ſources of genuine diction. Our language, for almoſt a century, has, by the concurrence of many cauſes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick ſtructure and phraſeology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recall it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of ſtyle, admitting among the additions of later times, only ſuch as may ſupply real deficiencies, ſuch as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate eaſily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeneſs antecedent to perfection, as well as of falſe refinement and declenſion, I have been cautious leſt my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer underſtood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excurſions. From the authours which roſe in the time of Elizabeth, a ſpeech might be formed adequate to all the purpoſes of uſe and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the tranſlation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phraſes of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenſer and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakeſpeare, few ideas would be loſt to mankind, for want of Engliſh words in which they might be expreſſed.

It is not ſufficient that a word is found, unleſs it be ſo combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the ſentence; ſuch paſſages I have therefore choſen, and when it happened that any authour gave a definition of a term, or ſuch an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a ſupplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwiſe obſerved.

Some words, indeed, ſtand unſupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and conſtant analogy, or names of things ſeldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reaſon to doubt the exiſtence.

There is more danger of cenſure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will ſometimes ſeem to have been accumulated without neceſſity or uſe, and perhaps ſome will be found, which might, without loſs, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not haſtily to be charged with ſuperfluities: thoſe quotations, which to careleſs or unſkilful peruſers appear only to repeat the ſame ſenſe, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diverſities of ſignification, or, at leaſt, afford different ſhades of the ſame meaning: one will ſhew the word applied to perſons, another to things; one will expreſs an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral ſenſe; one will prove the expreſſion genuine from an ancient authour; another will ſhew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous ſentence is aſcertained by a paſſage clear and determinate; the word, how often ſoever repeated, appears with new aſſociates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes ſomething to the ſtability or enlargement of the language.

When words are uſed equivocally, I receive them in either ſenſe; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have ſometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of ſentiments, by ſhewing how one authour copied the thoughts and diction of another: ſuch quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might juſtly be cenſured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual hiſtory.

The various ſyntactical ſtructures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licenſe or negligence with which many words have been hitherto uſed, has made our ſtyle capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the ſame word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, ~~and~~ I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured by ſettling the orthography, diſplaying the analogy, regulating the ſtructures, and aſcertaining the ſignification of Engliſh words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own ſcheme, or ſatisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is ſtill controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are ſometimes too much contracted, and ſometimes too much diffuſed, the ſignifications are diſtinguiſhed rather with ſubtilty than ſkill, and the attention is harraſſed with unneceſſary minuteneſs.

The examples are too often injudiciouſly truncated, and perhaps ſometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a miſtaken ſenſe; for in making this collection I truſted more to memory, than, in a ſtate of diſquiet and embarraſſment, memory can contain, and purpoſed to ſupply at the review what was left incomplete in the firſt tranſcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though neceſſary and ſignificant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words moſt ſtudiouſly conſidered and exemplified, many ſenſes have eſcaped obſervation.

Yet theſe failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the ſtrength that undertakes it: To reſt below his own aim is incident to every one whoſe fancy is active, and whoſe views are comprehenſive; nor is any man ſatisfied with himſelf becauſe he has done much, but becauſe he can conceive little. When firſt I engaged in this work, I reſolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleaſed myſelf with a proſpect of the hours which I ſhould revel away in feaſts of literature, with the obſcure receſſes of northern learning, which I ſhould enter and ranſack; the treaſures with which I expected every ſearch into thoſe neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I ſhould diſplay my acquiſitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I reſolved to ſhew likewiſe my attention to things; to pierce deep into every ſcience, to enquire the nature of every ſubſtance of which I inſerted the name, to limit every idea by a definition ſtrictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate deſcription, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But theſe were the dreams of a poet doomed at laſt to wake a lexicographer. I ſoon found that it is too late to look for inſtruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my taſk, with thoſe I muſt finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my firſt experiments, that what I had not of my own was eaſily to be obtained: I ſaw that one enquiry only gave occaſion to another, that book referred to book, that to ſearch was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to perſue perfection, was, like the firſt inhabitants of Arcadia, to chaſe the ſun, which, when they had reached the hill where he ſeemed to reſt, was ſtill beheld at the ſame diſtance from them.

I then contracted my deſign, determining to confide in myſelf, and no longer to ſolicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumberance than aſſiſtance: by this I obtained at leaſt one advantage, that I ſet limits to my work, which would in time be ended, though not completed.

Deſpondency has never ſo far prevailed as to depreſs me to negligence; ſome faults will at laſt appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and perſevering activity. The nice and ſubtle ramifications of meaning were not eaſily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the neceſſity of diſentangling combinations, and ſeparating ſimilitudes. Many of the diſtinctions which to common readers appear uſeleſs and idle, will be found real and important by men verſed in the ſchool philoſophy, without which no dictionary ſhall ever be accurately compiled, or ſkilfully examined.

Some ſenſes however there are, which, though not the ſame, are yet ſo nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Moſt men think indiſtinctly, and therefore cannot ſpeak with exactneſs; and conſequently ſome examples might be indifferently put to either ſignification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but regiſter the language; who do not teach men how they ſhould think, but relate how they have hitherto expreſſed their thoughts.

The imperfect ſenſe of ſome examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compenſated by innumerable paſſages ſelected with propriety, and preſerved with exactneſs; ſome ſhining with ſparks of imagination, and ſome replete with treaſures of wiſdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but becauſe care will not always be ſucceſsful, and recollection or information come too late for uſe.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, muſt be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not viſit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my ſkill in the dialect of navigation, nor viſit the warehouſes of merchants, and ſhops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or eaſy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeleſs labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and conteſting with the ſullenneſs of one, and the roughneſs of another.

To furniſh the academicians della Cruſca with words of this kind, a ſeries of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was profeſſedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no ſuch aſſiſtant, and therefore was content to want what they muſt have wanted likewiſe, had they not luckily been ſo ſupplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omiſſions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great meaſure caſual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for ſome temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a ſtate of increaſe or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore muſt be ſuffered to periſh with other things unworthy of preſervation.

Care will ſometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which ſeldom occur, will ſuffer thoſe to paſs by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is ſearching for rare and remote things, will neglect thoſe that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the moſt common and curſory words have been inſerted with little illuſtration, becauſe in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy thoſe which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things eaſy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatneſs, and diſdainful of littleneſs, haſtily withdraws herſelf from painful ſearches, and paſſes with ſcornful rapidity over taſks not adequate to her powers, ſometimes too ſecure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; ſometimes idle in a plain path, and ſometimes diſtracted in labyrinths, and diſſipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult becauſe it is large, even though all its parts might ſingly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each muſt be allowed its ſhare of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the ſtones which form the the dome of a temple, ſhould be ſquared and poliſhed like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with ſo much application, I cannot but have ſome degree of paternal fondneſs, it is natural to form conjectures. Thoſe who have been perſuaded to think well of my deſign, will require that it ſhould fix our language, and put a ſtop to thoſe alterations which time and chance have hitherto been ſuffered to make in it without oppoſition. With this conſequence I will confeſs that I flattered myſelf for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reaſon nor experience can juſtify. When we ſee men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promiſes to prolong life to a thouſand years; and with equal juſtice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preſerved their words and phraſes from mutability; ſhall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and ſecure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change ſublunary nature, and clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been inſtituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulſe intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; ſounds are too volatile and ſubtile for legal reſtraints; to enchain ſyllables, and to laſh the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to meaſure its deſires by its ſtrength. The French language has viſibly changed under the inſpection of the academy; the ſtyle of Amelot's tranſlation of father Paul is obſerved by Le Courayer to be un peu paſſé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and ſudden tranſformations of a language ſeldom happen; conqueſts and migrations are now very rare; but there are other cauſes of change, which, though ſlow in their operation, and inviſible in their progreſs, are perhaps as much ſuperior to human reſiſtance, as the revolutions of the ſky, or intumeſcence of the tide. Commerce, however neceſſary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourſe with ſtrangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themſelves, muſt in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which ſerves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coaſts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouſe, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at laſt incorporated with the current ſpeech.

There are likewiſe internal cauſes equally forcible. The language moſt likely to continue long without alteration, ~~would be~~ that of a nation raiſed a little, and but a little above barbarity, ſecluded from ſtrangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like ſome of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus buſied and unlearned, having only ſuch words as common uſe requires, would perhaps long continue to expreſs the ſame notions by the ſame ſigns. But no ſuch conſtancy can be expected in a people poliſhed by arts, and claſſed by ſubordination, where one part of the community is ſuſtained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Thoſe who have much leiſure to think, will always be enlarging the ſtock of ideas, and every increaſe of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from neceſſity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of ſpeculation, it will ſhift opinions; as any cuſtom is diſuſed, the words that expreſſed it muſt periſh with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate ſpeech in the ſame proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various ſciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furniſhed with words deflected from the original ſenſe; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the excentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the phyſician of ſanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiouſneſs of ſpeech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which ſome words will be preferred, and others degraded; viciſſitudes of faſhion will enforce the uſe of new, or extend the ſignification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current ſenſe: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen muſt at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by publick infatuation,

riſe into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will uſe them with colloquial licentiouſneſs, confound diſtinction, and forget propriety. As politeneſs increaſes, ſome expreſſions will be conſidered as too groſs and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phraſes are therefore adopted, which muſt, for the ſame reaſons, be in time diſmiſſed. Swift, in his petty treatiſe on the Engliſh language, allows that new words muſt ſometimes be introduced, but propoſes that none ſhould be ſuffered to become obſolete. But what makes a word obſolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how ſhall it be continued, when it conveys an offenſive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once become unfamiliar by diſuſe, and unpleaſing by unfamiliarity.

There is another cauſe of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the preſent ſtate of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third diſtinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the moſt conſpicuous accompliſhment, is ſkill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haſte and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expreſſions.

The great peſt of ſpeech is frequency of tranſlation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting ſomething of its native idiom; this is the moſt miſchievous and comprehenſive innovation; ſingle words may enter by thouſands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the ſame, but new phraſeology changes much at once; it alters not the ſingle ſtones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy ſhould be eſtabliſhed for the cultivation of our ſtyle, which I, who can never wiſh to ſee dependance multiplied, hope the ſpirit of Engliſh liberty will hinder or deſtroy, let them, inſtead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to ſtop the licenſe of tranſlatours, whoſe idleneſs and ignorance, if it be ſuffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irreſiſtible, what remains but to acquieſce with ſilence, as in the other inſurmountable diſtreſſes of humanity? It remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preſerved our conſtitution, let us make ſome ſtruggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology, without a conteſt, to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people ariſes from its authours: whether I ſhall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of Engliſh literature, muſt be left to time: much of my life has been loſt under the preſſures of diſeaſe; much has been trifled away; and much has always been ſpent in proviſion for the day that was paſſing over me; but I ſhall not think my employment uſeleſs or ignoble, if by my aſſiſtance foreign nations, and diſtant ages, gain acceſs to the propagators of knowledge, and underſtand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repoſitories of ſcience, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wiſh, I look with pleaſure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the ſpirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promiſed to myſelf: a few wild blunders, and riſible abſurdities, from which no work of ſuch multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furniſh folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but uſeful diligence will at laſt prevail, and there never can be wanting ſome who diſtinguiſh deſert; who will conſider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, ſince while it is haſtening to publication, ſome words are budding, and ſome falling away; that a whole life cannot be ſpent upon ſyntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be ſufficient; that he, whoſe deſign includes whatever language can expreſs, muſt often ſpeak of what he does not underſtand; that a writer will ſometimes be hurried by eagerneſs to the end, and ſometimes faint with wearineſs under a taſk, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always preſent; that ſudden fits of inadvertency will ſurprize vigilance, ſlight avocations will ſeduce attention, and caſual eclipſes of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer ſhall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yeſterday he knew with intuitive readineſs, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it ſhall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewiſe is performed; and though no book was ever ſpared out of tenderneſs to the authour, and the world is little ſolicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curioſity to inform it, that the Engliſh Dictionary was written with little aſſiſtance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the ſoft obſcurities of retirement, or under the ſhelter of academick bowers, but amidſt inconvenience and diſtraction, in ſickneſs and in ſorrow. It may repreſs the triumph of malignant criticiſm to obſerve, that if our language is not here fully diſplayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and compriſed in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of ſucceſſive ages, inadequate and deluſive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not ſecure them from the cenſure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been ſpent upon their work, were obliged to change its economy, and give their ſecond edition another form, I may ſurely be contented without the praiſe of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of ſolitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till moſt of thoſe whom I wiſhed to pleaſe have ſunk into the grave, and ſucceſs and miſcarriage are empty ſounds: I therefore diſmiſs it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from cenſure or from praiſe.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welſh were the firſt poſſeſſors of this iſland, whoſe names are recorded, and are therefore in civil hiſtory always conſidered as the predeceſſors of the preſent inhabitants; yet the deduction of the Engliſh language, from the earlieſt times of which we have any knowledge to its preſent ſtate, requires no mention of them: for we have ſo few words, which can, with any probability, be referred to Britiſh roots, that we juſtly regard the Saxons and Welſh, as nations totally diſtinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons ſeized this country, they ſuffered the Britains to live among them in a ſtate of vaſſalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble ſervices. But it is ſcarcely poſſible, that a nation, however depreſſed, ſhould have been mixed with another in conſiderable numbers without ſome communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reaſon, be imagined, that thoſe, who were not ſheltered in the mountains, periſhed by the ſword.

The whole fabrick and ſcheme of the Engliſh language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except thoſe where the Sclavonian is ſpoken. Of theſe languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK,

- ANGLO SAXON,
  - Dutch,
  - Friſick,
  - Engliſh.
- FRANCICK,
  - German.
- CIMBRICK,
  - Iſlandick,
  - Norwegian,
  - Swediſh,
  - Daniſh.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the goſpels ſomewhat mutilated, which, from the ſilver with which the characters are adorned, is called the ſilver book. It is now preſerved at Upſal, and having been twice publiſhed before, has been lately re-printed at Oxford, under the inſpection of Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius. Whether the diction of this venerable manuſcript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it ſeems however to exhibit the moſt ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the preſent Engliſh, was either derived from it, or both have deſcended from ſome common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they firſt entered Britain, cannot now be known. They ſeem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their ſpeech therefore, having been always curſory and extemporaneous, muſt have been artleſs and unconnected, without any modes of tranſition or involution of clauſes; which abruptneſs and inconnection may be obſerved even in their latter writings. This barbarity may be ſuppoſed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leiſure for ſofter ſtudies; nor is there any reaſon for ſuppoſing it abated, till the year 570, when Auguſtine came from Rome to convert them to Chriſtianity. The Chriſtian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning: they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and ſo gained, from time to time, ſome knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expreſſing all the ſentiments of a civiliſed people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphraſe or imitation of Boethius, and his ſhort preface, which I have ſelected as the firſt ſpecimen of ancient Engliſh.

This may perhaps be conſidered as a ſpecimen of the Saxon in its higheſt ſtate of purity, for here are ſcarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following verſion of the goſpels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conqueſt, and therefore may properly be inſerted here.

Tranſlations ſeldom afford juſt ſpecimens of a language, and leaſt of all thoſe in which a ſcrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, becauſe they retain the phraſeology and ſtructure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the ſame book, being tranſlated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into compariſon with another. For this purpoſe I have placed the Saxon verſion and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in oppoſite columns; becauſe the convenience of eaſy collation ſeems greater than that of regular chronology.

LUK, Chap. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preſt Zacarye by name: of the ſort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren juſte bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and juſtifyingis of the Lord withouten playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aftir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encenſying.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and ſtood on the right half of the auter of encenſe.

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was afrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif ſchal bere to thee a ſone: and his name ſchal be clepid Jon.

14 ⁊ he byð þe to ȝefean ⁊ to blisse. ⁊ maneȝa on hys acennednesse ȝefaȝniað:·

15 Soðlice he byð mære beforan Drihtne. and he ne drincð ƿin ne beor. ⁊ he bið ȝefylled on haliȝum Gaste. þonne ȝyt of his modor innoðe.

16 And maneȝa Israhela bearna he ȝecyrð to Drihtne hyra Gode.

17 And he ȝeð toforan him on ȝaste ⁊ Elias mihte. ꝥ he fædera heortan to hyra bearnum ȝecyrre. ⁊ unȝeleaffulle to rihtƿisra ȝleaƿscype. Drihtne fulfremed folc ȝeȝearƿian:·

18 Ða cƿæð Zacharias to þam enȝele. Hƿanun ƿat ic þis. ic eom nu eald. and min ƿif on hyre daȝum forðeode.·

19 Ða andsƿarode him se enȝel. Ic eom Gabriel. ic þe stande beforan Gode. and ic eom asend ƿið þe sprecan. ⁊ þe þis bodian.

20 And nu þu bist suƿiȝende. ⁊ þu sprecan ne miht oð þone dæȝ þe þas þinȝ ȝeƿurðað. forþam þu minum ƿordum ne ȝelyfdest. þa beoð on hyra timan ȝefyllede:·

21 And ꝥ folc ƿæs Zachariam ȝe-anbidiȝende. and ƿundrodon ꝥ he on þam temple læt ƿæs:·

22 Ða he ut-eode ne mihte he him to-sprecan. ⁊ hiȝ oncneoƿon ꝥ he on þam temple sume ȝesihtðe ȝeseah. ⁊ he ƿæs bicniende hym. ⁊ dumb þurh-ƿunede:·

23 Ða ƿæs ȝeƿorden þa his þenunȝa daȝas ȝefyllede ƿæron. he ferde to his huse:·

24 Soðlice æfter daȝum Elizabeth his ƿif ȝe-eacnode. and heo bediȝlude hiȝ fif monþas. ⁊ cƿæð.

25 Soðlice me Drihten ȝedyde þus. on þam daȝum þe he ȝeseah minne hosp betƿux mannum afyrran:·

26 Soðlice on þam syxtan monðe ƿæs asend Gabriel se enȝel fram Drihtne on Galilea ceastre. þære nama ƿæs Nazareth.

27 To beƿeddudre fæmnan anum ƿere. þæs nama ƿæs Ioseph. of Dauides huse. ⁊ þære fæmnan nama ƿæs Maria:·

28 Ða cƿæð se enȝel inȝanȝende. Hal ƿes þu mid ȝyfe ȝefylled. Drihten mid þe. ðu eart ȝebletsud on ƿifum:·

29 Þa ƿearð heo on his spræce ȝedrefed. and þohte hƿæt seo ȝretinȝ ƿære:·

30 Ða cƿæð se enȝel. Ne ondræd þu ðe Maria. soðlice þu ȝyfe mid Gode ȝemettest.

31 Soðlice nu. þu on innoðe ȝe-eacnast. and sunu censt. and his naman Hælend ȝenemnest.

32 Se bið mære. ⁊ þæs hehstan sunu ȝenemned. and him syld Drihten God his fæder Dauides setl.

33 And he ricsað on ecnesse on Iacobes huse. ⁊ his rices ende ne bið:·

34 Ða cƿæð Maria to þam enȝle. hu ȝeƿyrð þis. forþam ic ƿere ne oncnaƿe:·

35 Ða andsƿarode hyre se enȝel. Se halȝa Gast on þe becymð. ⁊ þæs heahstan miht þe ofersceadað. and forþam ꝥ haliȝe þe of þe acenned bið. bið Godes sunu ȝenemned.

36 And nu. Elizabeth þin maȝe sunu on hyre ylde ȝeacnode. and þes monað is hyre syxta. seo is unberende ȝenemned.

37 Forþam nis ælc ƿord mid Gode unmihtelic:·

38 Ða cƿæð Maria. Her is Drihtnes þinen. ȝeƿyrðe me æfter þinum ƿorde:· And se enȝel hyre fram-ȝeƿat:·

39 Soðlice on þam daȝum aras Maria ⁊ ferde on muntland mid fste on Iudeiscre ceastre.

40 ⁊ eode into Zacharias huse. ⁊ ȝrette Elizabeth:·

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee: and manye ſchulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he ſchal be great biſore the Lord: and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulfild with the holy Goſt yit of his modir wombe

12 And he ſchal converte manye of the children of Iſrael to her Lord God.

13 And he ſchal go biſore in the ſpiryte and vertu of Helye: and he ſchal turne the hertis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleeve: to the prudence of juſt men, to make redy a perfyt puple to the Lord.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh biſore God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to evangeliſe to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſchalt be doumbe.

16 And thou ſchalt not mowe ſpeke, til into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen be don. for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidynge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide ſtille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfillid: he wente into his hous.

20 And aftir theſe dayes Elizabeth his wyf conſeyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take awey my reprof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man; whos name was Joſeph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hir, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in his word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel ſeid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou ſchalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſchalt bere a ſone: and thou ſchalt clepe his name Jheſus.

28 This ſchal be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of higheſte, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſeete of Dauith his fadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the hous of Jacobe withouten ende, and of his rewme ſchal be noon ende.

30 And Marye ſeyde to the aungel, on what maner ſchal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to hir, the holy Goſt ſhall come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheſte ſchal ouer ſchadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that ſchal be borun of thee: ſchal be clepide the ſone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi coſyn, and ſche alſo hath conſeyved a ſone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the ſixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word ſchal not be impoſſyble anentis God.

34 And Marye ſeide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to be aftir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haſte into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And ſche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

41 Ða ƿæs geƿorden þa Elizabeth gehyrde Marian gretinge. ða gefagnude ꝥ cild on hyre innoðe. and þa ƿearð Elizabeth haligum Gaste gefylled.

72 Mild-heortnesse to ƿyrcenne mid urum fæderum. ⁊ gemunan his halegan cyðnesse.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the ſalutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Goſt.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and ſeyde, bleſſid be thou among wymmen and bleſſid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And wherof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi ſalutacioun was maad in myn eeris: the yong child gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſſid by thou that haſt beleeved: for thilke thingis that ben ſeid [illegible] the Lord to thee ſchulen be parfytly don.

42 And Marye ſeyde, my ſoul magnifieth the Lord.

43 And my ſpiryt hath gladid in God myn helthe.

44 For he hath behulden the mekeneſſe of his handmayden: for lo for this alle generatiouns ſchulen ſeye that I am bleſſid.

45 For he that is mighti hath don to me gret thingis, and his name is holy.

46 And his merſy is fro kyndrede into kyndredis to men that dreden him.

47 He made myght in his arm, he ſcateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He ſette doun myghty men fro ſeete and enhaunſide meke men.

49 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men voide.

50 He havynge mynde of his mercy took up Iſrael his child,

51 As he hath ſpokun to oure fadris, to Abraham, and to his ſeed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned agen into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and ſche bar a ſon.

54 And the neyghbouris and coſyns of hir herden that the Lord hadde magnyfied his mercy with hir, and thei thankiden him.

55 And it was doon in the eightithe day thei camen to circumſide the child, and thei clepiden him Zacarye by the name of his fadir.

56 And his modir anſweride and ſeide, nay; but he ſchal be clepid Jon.

57 And thei ſeiden to hir, for no man is in thi kynrede that is clepid this name.

58 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

59 And he axinge a poyntel wroot ſeyinge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

60 And annoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he ſpak and bleſſide God.

61 And drede was maad on all hir neighbouris, and all the wordis weren publiſchid on alle the mounteynes of Judee.

62 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and ſeiden what manner child ſcal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Goſt, and profeciede and ſeide,

64 Bleſſid be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he has viſitid and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

66 As he ſpak by the mouth of hiſe holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

67 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68 To do merſy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy teſtament.

69 The grete ooth that he ſwoor to Abraham our fadir,

70 To geve himſelf to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of oure enemyes ſerve to him,
71 In holyneſſe and rightwiſneſſe before him, in alle oure dayes.
72 And thou child ſchalt be clepid the profete of the higheſte, for thou ſchalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hiſe weyes.
73 To geve ſcience of heelth to his puple into remiſſioun of her ſynnes.
74 By the inwardeneſs of the merſy of oure God, in the which he ſpringyng up fro on high hath viſited us.
75 To geve light to them that ſitten in derkneſſis, and in ſchadowe of deeth, to dreſſe oure feet into the weye of pees;
76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in ſpiryt, and was in deſert placis till to the day of his ſchewing to Yſrael.

Of the Saxon poetry ſome ſpecimen is neceſſary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their ſyllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to recover, excludes us from that pleaſure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The firſt poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and conſequently muſt have depended upon the quantity of their ſyllables: but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and cloſe their verſes with correſpondent ſounds.

The two paſſages which I have ſelected, contain apparently the rudiments of our preſent lyrick meaſures, and the writers may be juſtly conſidered as the genuine anceſtors of the Engliſh poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the preſent Engliſh may be plainly diſcovered: this change ſeems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueſt, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firſt hundred years after it; the language muſt therefore have been altered by cauſes like thoſe which, notwithſtanding the care of writers and ſocieties inſtituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a ſpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Ðis gære for þe king Stephne ofer sæ to Normandi. ⁊ þer ƿes under-fangen. forði ꝥ hi ƿenden ꝥ he sculde ben alsuic alse þe eom ƿes. ⁊ for he hadde get his tresor. ac he to deld it ⁊ scatered sotlice. Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeem to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations; for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Engliſh; in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing authour of St. Margarite, which poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century.

Hẏs tueẏe ſones he ȝef ẏs lond, as he bẏȝet ham ere.
Adelbold, the eldore, þe kẏnedom of Eſtſex,
And ſuþþe Adelbrẏȝt, Kent and Weſtſex.
Eẏȝte hondred ȝer ẏt was and ſeuene and fẏftẏ al ſo,
After þat God anerþe com, þat þẏs dede was ẏdo.
Boþe hii wuſte bẏ her tẏme wel her kẏnedom,
At þe vẏſte ger Adelbold out of þẏs lyue nome.
At Sſẏrebourne he was ẏbured, & ẏs broþer Adelbrẏȝt
His kẏnedom adde after hẏm, as lawe was and rẏȝt.
Bẏ ẏs daye þe verde com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamteſſyre and deſtrude Wẏncheſtre al out.
And þat lond folc of Hamteſſẏre her red þo nome
And of Barcſſyre, and foȝte and þe ſſrewen ouercome.
Adelbrẏȝt was kẏng of Kent ȝeres folle tene,
And of Weſtſex bote vẏue, þo he deẏde ẏch wene.

ADELRED was after hẏm kẏng ẏ mad in þe place,
Eẏȝte hondred & ſeuene & ſẏxtẏ as in þe ȝer of grace:
Þe vorſte ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom þe Deneẏs þẏcke com,
And robbede and deſtrude, and cẏtes vaſte nome.
Maẏſtres hii adde of her oſt, as ẏt were dukes, tueẏe,
Hẏnguar and Hubba, þat ſſrewen were beẏe.
In Eſt Angle hii bẏleuede, to reſt hem as ẏt were,
Mẏd her oſt al þe wynter, of þe vorſt ȝere.
Þe oþer ȝer hii dude hem vorþ, & ouer Homber come,
And ſlowe to grounde & barnde, & Euerwẏk nome.
Þer was bataẏle ſtrong ẏ nou, vor ẏſlawe was þere
Oſryc kẏng of Homberlond, & monẏe þat with hẏm were.
Þo Homberlond was þus ẏſſend, hii wende & tounes nome.
So a t atte laſte to Eſtangle aȝen hẏm come.

þer hii barnde & robbede, & þat folc to grounde ſlowe,
And, as wolues among ſſep, reulẏch hem to drowe.
Seẏnt Edmond was þo her kẏng, & þo he ſeẏ þat deluol cas
þat me morþrede ſo þat folc, & non amendement nas,
He ches leuere to deẏe hẏmſulf, þat ſuch ſorwe to ẏſeẏ.
He dude hẏm vorþ among ẏs fon, nolde he nōþẏg fle.
Hii nome hẏm & ſcourged hẏm, & ſuþþe naked hẏm bounde
To a tre, & to hẏm ſſote, & made hẏm monẏ a wounde, þat þe arewe were on hẏm þo þẏcce, þat no ſtede nas bẏleuede.
Atte laſte hii martred hẏm, & ſmẏte of ẏs heued.
þe ſẏxte ȝer of þe crounement of Aldered þe kẏng
A nẏwe oſt com into þẏs lond, gret þoru alle þẏng,
And anon to Redẏnge robbede and ſlowe.
þe king and Alfred ẏs broþer nome men ẏnowe,
Mette hem, and a bataẏle ſmẏte vp Aſſeldoune.
þer was monẏ moder chẏld, þat ſone laẏ þer doune.
þe bataẏle ẏlaſte vorte nẏȝt, and þer were aſlawe
Vẏf dukes of Denemarch, ar hii wolde wyþ drawe,
And mony þouſend of oþer men, & þo gonne hii to fle;
Ac hii adde alle ẏbe aſſend, ȝẏf þe nẏȝt nadde ẏ be.
Tueye bataẏles her after in þe ſulf ȝere
Hii ſmyte, and at boþe þe heþene maẏſtres were.
þe kẏng Aldered ſone þo þen weẏ of deþ nome,
As ẏt vel, þe vẏftẏ ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom.
At Wẏmbourne he was ẏbured, as God ȝef þat cas, þe gode Alfred, ẏs broþer, after hẏm kẏng was.

ALFRED, þẏs noble man, as in þe ȝer of grace he nom
Eẏȝte hondred & ſẏxtẏ & tuelue þe kẏnedom.
Arſt he adde at Rome ẏbe, &, vor ẏs grete wẏſdom,
þe pope Leon hẏm bleſſede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kynge's croune of hẏs lond, þat in þẏs lond ȝut ẏs:
And he led hẏm to be kẏng, ar he kẏng were ẏwẏs.
An he was kẏng of Engelond, of alle þat þer come,
þat vorſt þus ẏlad was of þe pope of Rome,
An ſuþþe oþer after hẏm of þe erchebẏſſopes echon.
So þat hẏuor hẏm pore kẏng nas þer non.
In þe Souþ ſẏde of Temeſe nẏne bataẏles he nome
Aȝen þe Deneẏs þe vorſt ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom.
Nẏe ȝer he was þus in þẏs lond in bataẏle & in wo,
An ofte ſẏþe aboue was, and bẏneþe oftor mo;
So longe, þat hẏm nere bẏ leuede bote þre ſſẏren in ẏs hond,
Hamteſſyre, and Wẏlteſſyre, and Somerſete, of al ẏs lond.
A daẏ as he werẏ was, and aſuoddrẏnge hẏm nome
And ẏs men were ẏwend auẏſſeþ, Seyn Cutbert to hym com.
“ Ich am,” he ſeyde, “ Cutbert, to þe ẏcham ẏwend
“ To brẏnge þe gode tẏtẏnges. Fram God ẏcham ẏſend.
“ Vor þat folc of þẏs lond to ſẏnne her wẏlle al ȝeue,
“ And ȝut nolle herto her ſẏnnes bẏleue
“ þoru me & oþer halewen, þat in þẏs lond were ẏbore;
“ þan vor ȝou bẏddeþ God, wanne we beþ hẏm bẏuore,
“ Hour Louerd mẏd ẏs eyen of milce on þe lokeþ þeruore,
“ And þẏ poer þe wole ȝẏue aȝen, þat þou aſt neẏ verlore.
“ And þat þou þer of ſoþ ẏſe, þou ſſalt abbe tokẏnẏnge.
“ Vor þẏm men, þat beþ ago to daẏ auẏſſẏnge,
“ In lepes & in couſles ſo muche vyſs hii ſſolde hẏm brynge,
“ þat ech man wondrẏ ſſal of ſo gret cacchẏnge.
“ And þe mor vor þe harde vorſte, þat þe water ẏfrore hys,
“ þat þe more aȝen þe kunde of vyſſẏnge ẏt ẏs.
“ Of ſerue ẏt wel aȝen God, and ẏlet me ys meſſager,
“ And þou ſſall þẏ wẏlle abẏde, as ẏcham ẏtold her.”
As þẏs kẏng herof awoc, and of þẏs ſẏȝte þoȝte,
Hys vẏſſares come tó hẏm, & ſo gret won of fyſs hẏm broȝte,
þat wonder ẏt was, and namelẏche vor þe weder was ſo colde.
þo lẏuede þe god man wel, þat Seẏn Cutbert adde ẏtold.
In Deuenẏſſyre þer after arẏuede of Deneẏs
þre and tuentẏ ſſẏpuol men, all aȝen þe peẏs, þe kẏnge's broþer of Denemarch duc of oſt was.
Oure kẏnge's men of Engelond mette hem bẏ cas,
And ſmẏte þer an bataẏle, and her gret duc ſlowe,
And eyȝte hondred & fourtẏ men, & her caronẏes to drowe.
þo kyng Alfred hurde þẏs, ẏs herte gladede þo,
þat lond folc to hẏm come ſo þẏcke ſo ẏt mẏȝte go,
Of Somerſete, of Wẏlteſſẏre, of Hamteſſẏre þerto,
Euere as he wende, and of ẏs owe folc al ſo.
So þat he adde poer ẏnou, and atte laſte hii come,
And a bataẏle at Edendone aȝen þe Deneẏs nome.
And ſlowe to grounde, & wonne þe maẏſtre of the velde.
þe kẏng & ẏs grete duke bẏgonne hem to ȝelde
To þe kẏng Alfred to ẏs wẏlle, and oſtages toke,
Vorto wende out of ẏs lond, ȝẏf he ẏt wolde loke;
And ȝut þerto, vor ys loue, to auonge Criſtendom.
Kẏng Gurmund, þe hexte kẏng, vorſt þer to come.
Kẏng Alfred ẏs godfader was, & ẏbaptẏſed ek þer were þrettẏ of her hexte dukes, and muche of þat folc þere
Kẏng Alfred hem huld wẏþ hẏm tuelf dawes as he hende,
And ſuþþe he ȝef hem large ȝẏftes, and let hẏm wende.
Hii, þat nolde Criſtyn be, of lande ſlowe þo,
And byȝonde ſee in France dude wel muche wo.
ȝut þe ſſrewen come aȝen, and muche wo here wroȝte.
Ac þe kẏng Alfred atte laſte to ſſame hem euere broȝte.
Kẏng Alfred was þe wẏſoſt kẏng, þat long was bẏuore.
Vor þeẏ me ſegge þe lawes beþ in worre tẏme vorlore,
Nas ẏt noȝt ſo hiis daẏe. vor þeẏ he in worre were,
Lawes he made rẏȝtuollore, and ſtrengore þan er were.
Clerc he was god ynou, and ȝut, as me telleþ me,
He was more þan ten ȝer old, ar he couþe ẏs abece.
Ac ẏs gode moder ofte ſmale ȝẏftes hẏm tok,
Vor to byleue oþer ple, and lokẏ on ẏs boke.
So þat bẏ por clergẏe ẏs rẏȝt lawes he wonde,
þat neuere er nere ẏ mad, to gouernẏ ẏs lond.
And vor þe worre was ſo muche of þe luþer Deneẏs, þe men of þẏs ſulue lond were of þe worſe peẏs.
And robbede and ſlowe oþere, þeruor he bẏuonde,
þat þer were hondredes in eche contreẏe of ẏs lond,
And in ech toune of þe hondred a teþẏnge were alſo,
And þat ech man wyþoute gret lond in teþẏnge were ẏdo,
And þat ech man knewe oþer þat in teþẏnge were,
And wuſte ſomdel of her ſtat, ȝẏf me þu vp hem bere.
So ſtreẏt he was, þat þeẏ me ledde amẏdde weẏes heẏe
Seluer, þat non man ne dorſte ẏt nẏme, þeẏ he ẏt ſeẏe.
Abbeẏs he rerde monẏ on, and monẏ ſtudes ẏwẏs.
Ac Wyncheſtrye he rerde on, þat nẏwe munſtre ẏcluped ẏs.
Hẏs lẏf eẏȝte and tuentẏ ȝer in ẏs kẏnedom ẏlaſte.
After ẏs deþ he wos ybured at Wẏncheſtre atte laſte.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himſelf informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which compriſing a relation of many different particulars, conſequently required the uſe of many words and phraſes, may be properly ſpecified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have choſen the firſt, becauſe it ſhows, in ſome meaſure, the ſtate of European ſcience as well as of the Engliſh tongue; and the ſecond, becauſe it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expreſſion.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may ſee the ſterre tranſmontane, that is clept the ſterre of the ſee, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode ſterre. But men ſeen another ſterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the ſchip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode ſterre, right ſo don ſchip men bezonde the parties, be the ſterre of the Southe, the which ſterre apperethe not to us. And this ſterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode ſterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cauſe, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the ſee ben of rownde ſchapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament ſchewethe in o contree, that ſchewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and ſotyle compaſſement of wytt, that zif a man fond paſſages be ſchippes, that wolde go to ſerchen the world, men myghte go be ſchippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aftre that I have ſeyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Aſtrolabre, that the ſterre that is clept the tranſmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties ſeptemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my ſelf have meſured it by the Aſtrolabre. Now ſchulle ze knowe, that azen the Tranſmontayne, is the tother ſterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have ſeyd before. And tho 2 ſterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: ſo that tho ſterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; ſo that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men ſeen firſt the ſterre Antartyk. And ſo fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that ſterre more highe; ſo that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes ~~maken~~ a degree) aftre goynge be ſee and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have ſpoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the ſterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and ſchippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee ſcholde have ſeen alle the roundneſſe of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have ſeyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 ſterres: the whiche halfondelle I have ſeyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have ſeyn toward the Northe, undre the Tranſmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have ſeen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have ſeen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and ſo there ne faylethe but that I have ſeen alle the firmament, ſaf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundneſſe of the firmament holt 90 degrees: ſo there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And alſo I have ſeen the 3 parties of alle the roundneſſe of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I ſeye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and ſchippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he ſcholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben ſtreghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the tranſmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn undre us, ben feet azenſt feet. For alle the parties of ſee and of lond han here appoſitees, habitables or trepaſſables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Preſtre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jeruſalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Weſt: and the londe of Preſtre John is the low partie of the erthe, toward the Eſt: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and alſo highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the ſee ben of round forme and ſchapp, as I have ſeyd beforn. And than that men gon upward to o coſt, men gon dounward to another coſt. Alſo zee have herd me ſeye, that Jeruſalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and ſchewen there, be a ſpere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that ſchewethe no ſchadwe on no ſyde. And that it ſcholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytneſſethe it in the Pſautre, where he ſeythe, Deus operatus eſt ſalutē in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the Weſt, for to go toward Jeruſalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jeruſalem, unto other confynyes of the ſuperficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iourneyes, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, undre oure contrees on this half. And therfore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed ſometyme from oure contrees, for to go ſerche the world. And ſo he paſſed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and ſo longe he wente be ſee and lond, and ſo enviround the world be many ſeyſons, that he fond an yle, where he herde ſpeke his owne langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, ſuche wordes as men ſpeken to beſtes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I ſeye, that he had gon ſo longe, be londe and be ſee, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to ſeye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have paſſed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and ſo he loſte moche peynefulle labour, as him ſelf ſeyde, a gret while aftre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempeſt of the ſee toke him; and he arryved in an yle: and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd ſpeke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was poſſible thinge. But how it ſemethe to ſymple men unlerned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and alſo that men ſcholde falle toward the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon leſſe, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle, outher aboven or benethen, it ſemethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it ſemethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte ſo it ſemethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere reſoun, the erthe and the ſee, that ben ſo grete and ſo hevy, ſcholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore ſeithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui ſuſpendi terrā ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be poſſible thing, that men may ſo envyronne alle the world, nathles of a 1000 perſones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde redye him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundneſſe and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, aftre the opynyoun of the olde wiſe aſtronomeres. And here ſeyenges I repreve noughte. But aftre my lyttylle wyt, it ſemethe me, ſavynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere underſtondynge, I ſeye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than aftre, be the gret compaſs deviſed be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; ſo that in as many parties, as the grete compas ſchal be departed, in als manye, ſchalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the ſpaces ben leſſe. Now thanne, be the gret compas repreſented for the firmament, and the litille compas repreſented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyſed, be aſtronomeres, in 12 ſignes; and every ſigne is devyſed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Alſo, be the erthe devyſed in als many parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye anſwere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that aftre the auctoures of aſtronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe anſweren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 ſithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, aftre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundneſſe, and of heghte enviroun, aftre myn opynyoun and myn undirſtondynge. And zee ſchulle undirſtonde, that aftre the opynyoun of olde wiſe philoſophres and aſtronomeres, oure contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles coſtynge to hem, ne ben not in the ſuperficyalte cownted aboven the erthe; as it ſchewethe be alle the bokes of aſtronomye. For the ſuperficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben deſcendynge toward the Weſt. And alſo theſe yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenſt us, beth noght reckned in the climates: for thei ben azenſt us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates ſtrecchen hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte aboveſeyd, (alle thoughe I bē unworthi) that departed from oure contrees and paſſed the ſee, the zeer of grace 1322. that have paſſed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle ſtraunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myſelf, for myn unable inſuffiſance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my ſelf) to reſte: for gowtes, artetykes, that me diſtreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenſt my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge ſolace in my wrecched reſte, recordynge the tyme paſſed, I have fulfilled theiſe thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it pleſe hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I ſchalle preye for hem. And alle tho that ſeyn for me a Pater noſter, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my ſynnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his pleſance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I ſchalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beſeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godeneſſe and grace comethe fro, that he voucheſaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fiylle hire ſoules with inſpiracioun of the Holy Goſt, in makynge defence of alle hire goſtly enemyes here in erthe, to hire ſalvacioun, bothe of body and ſoule; to worſchipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, withouten begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, withouten qualitee, good, and withouten quantytee, gret; that in alle places is preſent, and alle thinges contenynynge; the whiche that no goodneſſe may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The firſt of our authours, who can be properly ſaid to have written Engliſh, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confeſſion of a Lover, calls Chaucer his diſciple, and may therefore be conſidered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to ſpeke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befalle in ſondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All ſodeinly, er it be wiſt,
A tunne, whan his lie ariſt
Tobreketh, and renneth alle aboute,
Which els ſhulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell ſkare
Vpon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the ſtreme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it ſhall reſtreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wiſe, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miſwent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in ſondrie wiſe:
But what man wolde him ſelfe auiſe
His conſcience, and nought miſuſe,
He maie well at the firſt excuſe
His god, whiche euer ſtant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So muſt it ſtande vpon vs ſelue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cauſe of that ſhall fall.

The hiſtory of our language is now brought to the point at which the hiſtory of our poetry is generally ſuppoſed to commence, the time of the illuſtrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great juſtice, be ſtyled the firſt of our verſifiers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deſerved all the praiſe which he has received, or all the cenſure that he has ſuffered. Dryden, who, miſtaking genius for learning, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, aſcribes to Chaucer the firſt refinement of our numbers, the firſt production of eaſy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more poliſhed languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harſh terms for having vitiated his native ſpeech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find ſmooth numbers and eaſy rhymes, of which Chaucer is ſuppoſed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to diſcover with particular exactneſs; but the works of Gower and Lydgate ſufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and ſome improvements he undoubtedly made by the various diſpoſitions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he ſeems to have been happy and judicious. I have ſelected ſeveral ſpecimens both of his proſe and verſe; and among them, part of his tranſlation of Boetius, to which another verſion, made in the time of queen Mary, is oppoſed. It would be improper to quote very ſparingly an authour of ſo much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book ſo generally known.

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am conſtrained to begin verſe of ſorrowful matter, that whilom in flouriſhyng ſtudie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng muſes of Poetes enditen to me thinges to be writen, and drerie teres. At laſte no drede ne might overcame tho muſes, that thei ne werren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to ſaie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now ſorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, haſted by the harmes that I have, and ſorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren ſhad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the ſlacke ſkinne trembleth of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be ſwete, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas! with how deſe an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to cloſe wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that ſorowfull houre, that is to ſaie, the deth, had almoſte drente myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or wherto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, ſtode in no ſtedfaſt degre.

COLVILE.

I THAT in tyme of proſperite, and floryſhing ſtudye, made pleaſaunte and delectable dities, or verſes: alas now beyng heauy and ſad ouerthrowen in aduerſitie, am compelled to fele and taſt heuines and greif. Beholde the muſes Poeticall, that is to ſaye: the pleaſure that is in poetes verſes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ theſe verſes in meter, and the ſorowfull verſes do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yſſuinge out of my eyes for ſorowe. Whiche muſes no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or baniſhment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and luſty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the courſe of ſorowfull olde age cauſeth me to reioyſe. For haſty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and ſorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the ſame old age, that is to ſay: that ſorowe cauſeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled ſkynne trembleth my fleſh, cleane conſumed and waſted with ſorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is luſtye, and in pleaſure or welth: but in time of aduerſitie, when it is often deſyred. Alas alas howe dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in miſery that would fayne dye: and yet refuſythe to come and ſhutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that falſe fortune fauoryd me with her tranſitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almoſt ouercom me. That is to ſay deathe was redy to oppreſſe me when I was in proſperitie. Nowe for by cauſe that fortune beynge turned, from proſperitie into aduerſitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you ſo often boſted me, ſayinge that I was happy when I had honor poſſeſſions riches, and authoritie whych be tranſitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no ſtedefaſt degre.

IN the mene while, that I ſtill record theſe thynges with my ſelf, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I ſaugh ſtondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by ſemblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, ſeyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with ſoche vigour and ſtrength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it ſo, that ſhe were full of ſo grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that ſhe were of our elde.

The ſtature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for ſometyme ſhe conſtrained and ſhronke her ſelven, like to the common meſure of menne: And ſometyme it ſemed, that ſhe touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when ſhe hove her hedde higher, ſhe perced the ſelf heven, ſo that the ſight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and ſubtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes ſhe had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her ſelf declaryng, and ſhewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkneſſe of a forleten and diſpiſed elde had duſked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by ſmoked Images.

WHYLES that I conſiderydde pryuylye with my ſelfe the thynges before ſayd, and deſcrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I ſawe a woman ſtand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glytteryng clere eyes, aboue the common ſorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of ſtrength, although ſhe ſemed ſo olde that by no meanes ſhe is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her ſtature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe ſhe ſhewethe herſelfe at the commen length or ſtatur of men, and other whiles ſhe ſemeth ſo high, as though ſhe touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when ſhe wold ſtretch forth her hed hygher, it alſo perced thorough heauen, ſo that mens ſyghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her veſtures or cloths were perfyt of the finyſte thredes, and ſubtyll workemanſhyp, and of ſubſtaunce permament, whych veſturs ſhe had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne ſaiynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veſtures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldenes forgotten hadde obſcuryd and darkened, as the ſmoke is wont to darken Images that ſtand nyghe the ſmoke. In the lower parte of the ſaid veſtures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych ſignifyeth practiſe or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the menne redde iwoven therein a Grekiſhe A. that ſignifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hieſt bordure, a Grekiſhe C. that ſignifieth the life contemplatiſe. And betwene theſe two letters there were ſeen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the nethereſt letter to the uppereſt: natheleſſe handes of ſome men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by ſtrength, and everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie ſoche peces, as he might getten. And forſothe this foreſaied woman bare ſmale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand ſhe bare a ſcepter. And when ſhe ſawe theſe Poeticall muſes approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, ſhe was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (qđ ſhe) hath ſuffered approchen to this ſike manne theſe commen ſtrompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne aſſwagen not his ſorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and noriſhe hym with ſwete venime? Forſothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, diſtroien the Corne, plentuous of fruictes of reſon. For thei holden hertes of men in uſage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muſes had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly emong the peple, I would well ſuffre the laſſe grevouſly. For why, in ſoche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nouriſhed in my ſtudies or ſcoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben ſwete, till it be at the laſt, and ſuffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muſes, that is to ſay, by my notefull ſciences. And thus this companie of muſes iblamed caſten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and ſhewing by redneſſe ther ſhame, thei paſſeden ſorowfully the threſholde. And I of whom the ſight plounged in teres was darked, ſo that I ne might not know what that woman was, of ſo Imperial aucthoritie, I woxe all abaſhed and ſtonied, and caſt my ſight doune to the yerth, and began ſtill for to abide what ſhe would doen afterward. Then came ſhe nere, and ſet her doune upon the uttereſt corner of my bed, and ſhe beholdyng my chere, that was caſt to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with theſe wordes (that I ſhall ſaine) the perturbacion of my thought, veſtures the greke letter T. whych eſtandeth for theorica, that ſignifieth ſpeculacion or contemplation. And betwene both the ſayd letters were ſene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a paſſage or waye in ſteppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderſtand from practys or actyf, unto the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderſtand ſpeculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of ſome vyolente perſones had cut the ſayde veſtures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, ſuch as euery one coulde catch. And ſhe her ſelfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande a ſcepter, which foreſayd phyloſophy (when ſhe ſaw the muſes poetycal preſent at my bed, ſpekyng ſorrowful wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry ſayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaunce) who ſuffred theſe crafty harlottes to com to thys ſycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increaſe the ſame with ſwete poyſon. Theſe be they that doo dyſtroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reaſon and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accuſtome or ſubdue mens myndes with ſickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the ſame. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen ſorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke ſhould not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the ſtudyes of Ariſtotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence maremaids (that ſeme ſwete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe) and ſuffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muſes or ſcyences that be holſome and good. And after that philoſophy had ſpoken theſe word s the ſayd companye of the muſys poeticall beynge rebukyd and ſad, caſte down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by bluſſyng confeſſed their ſhamfaſtnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my ſyght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, ſo that I knew not what woman this was hauyng ſoo great aucthoritie) was amaſyd or aſtonyed, and lokyng downeward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng ſhe would ſaye ferther, then ſhe had ſaid. Then ſhe approching and drawynge nere vnto me, ſat downe vpon the vttermoſt part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face ſad with weping, and declynyd toward the earth for ſorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth theſe ſayinges folowynge.

The concluſions of the Astrolabie.

This book (written to his ſon in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) ſtandeth ſo good at this day, eſpecially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, ſays an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my ſonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne ſcyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and alſo well conſydre I thy beſye prayer in eſpecyal to lerne the tretyſe of the aſtrolabye. Than for as moche as a philoſopher ſaithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiſcendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a ſufficient aſtrolabye for our orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretiſe, I purpoſe to teche the a certaine nombre of concluſions, pertainynge to this ſame inſtrument. I ſay a certaine nombre of concluſions for thre cauſes, the firſt cauſe is this. Truſte wel that al the concluſions that have be founden, or ells poſſiblye might be founde in ſo noble an inſtrument as in the aſtrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I ſuppoſe. Another cauſe is this, that ſothely in any cartes of the aſtrolabye that I have yſene, ther ben ſome concluſions, that wol not in al thinges perſourme ther beheſtes: and ſome of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretiſe divided in five partes, wil I ſhewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Engliſhe, for Latine ne canſt thou nat yet but ſmale, my litel ſonne. But nevertheleſſe ſuffiſeth to the theſe trewe concluſyons in Engliſhe, as well as ſuffiſeth to theſe noble clerkes grekes theſe ſame concluſions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem firſte out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to ſaine in Latine.

And God wote that in all theſe languages and in manye mo, have theſe concluſyons ben ſufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every perſon diſcrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretiſe to have my rude ententing excuſed, and my ſuperfluite of wordes, for two cauſes. The firſt cauſe is, for that curious endityng and harde ſentences is ful hevy at ones, for ſoch a childe to lerne. And the ſeconde cauſe is this, that ſothely me ſemeth better to writen unto a childe twiſe a gode ſentence, that he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be ſo that I ſhewe the in my lith Engliſhe, as trew concluſions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and ſubtil concluſions as ben yſhewed in latin, in any comon tretiſe of the aſtrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God ſave the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeith everiche in his degree, the more and the laſſe. But conſydreth well, that I ne uſurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde aſtrologiens, and have it tranſlated in myn engliſhe onely for thy doctrine: and with this ſwerde ſhal I ſlene envy.

The firſt party.

The firſt partye of this tretiſe ſhall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne aſtrolaby, bycauſe that thou ſhalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne inſtrument.

The ſeconde party.

The ſeconde partye ſhal teche the to werken the very practike of the foreſaid concluſions, as ferforthe and alſo narowe as may be ſhewed in ſo ſmale an inſtrument portatiſe aboute. For wel wote every aſtrologien, that ſmalleſt fractions ne wol not be ſhewed in ſo ſmal an inſtrument, as in ſubtil tables calculed for a cauſe.

The Prologue of the Testament of LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eres openly ſprad ſo moche ſwalowen the deliciouſneſſe of jeſtes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godeneſſe or of the badneſſe of the ſentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle ſoule ſo ſore have mined and graffed in my ſpirites, that ſoche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boiſtous percen the herte of the herer to the inreſt point, and planten there the ſentence of thinges, ſo that with litel helpe it is able to ſpring, this boke, that nothynge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of ſemelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boiſtous, and ſo drawe togider to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent ſentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and ſome with wers, as with red inke, and ſome with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the ſyght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the firſt leudeneſſe. So ſothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayſe, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudeneſſe commendeth. Eke it ſhal yeve ſight that other precyous thynges ſhall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many ſoveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben ſome that ſpeken their poiſye mater in Frenche, of whiche ſpeche the Frenche men have as gode a fantaſye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Engliſhe. And many termes there ben in Englyſhe, whiche unneth we Engliſhe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe ſhould than a Frenche man borne? ſoche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Engliſhe. Right ſo truely the underſtandyn of Engliſhmen woll not ſtretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what ſo ever we boſten of ſtraunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of ſcience, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche alſo enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us ſhewe our fantaſies in ſuch wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudneſſe in travaile, yet ſoch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben neceſſarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour ſene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightly may be conceved to eſchue perils, and neceſſaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or perſons.

Certes the ſoverainſt thinge of deſire and moſt creture reſonable, have or els ſhuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unreſonable beſtes mowen not, ſithe reſon hath in 'hem no workinge: than reſonable that wol not, is compariſoned to unreſonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forſothe the moſt ſoveraine and final perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a ſothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the conſideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, underſtandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unſene pryvities of God made to us ſyghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and underſtondinge. Theſe thinges than forſothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge ſothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David ſaith: thou haſte delited me in makinge, as who ſaith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in conſideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Ariſtotle in the boke de Animalibus, ſaith to naturell philoſophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and alſo in knowinge of cauſes in kindelye thynges, conſidrid forſothe the formes of kyndelye thinges and the ſhap, a gret kyndely love we ſhulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is ſhewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philoſophers with a lyvely ſtudie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret ſwet and travaille to us leften of cauſes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philoſophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty luſt in kindely vertues and matters of reſon the perfeccion by buſy ſtudy to knowe, than to have had all the treſour, al the richeſſe, al the vaine glory, that the paſſed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to ſaine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke preſſed that ſoch godenes hated. And bicauſe this boke ſhall be of love, and the prime cauſes of ſtering in that doinge with paſſions and diſeſes for wantinge of deſire, I wil that this boke be cleped the teſtament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in ſcorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, ſay he wil rende out the ſwerde of Hercules handes, and alſo he ſhulde ſet Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of ſtrength to pull up the ſpere, that Aliſander the noble might never wagge, and that paſſinge al thinge to ben mayſter of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his grete proweſſe in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther ſhall be made more ſcorne and jape of me, that I ſo unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to ſpeak of love, or els of the cauſes in that matter, ſithen al the gretteſt clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who ſaith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther ſharp ſithes of conning al mowen and made therof grète rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forſothe commendeth noughte his reſon, that he hath in hain, be it never ſo truſty. And although theſe noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the ſheves, and made many ſhockes, yet have I enſample to gaðer the ſmale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the ſmalle houndes, notwithſtanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remiſſailes, as trenchours, and the releſe to bere to the almeſſe Yet alſo have I leve of the noble huſbande Boece, although I be a ſtraunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and theſe grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the ſhedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encreſe my porcion with that I ſhal drawe by privyties out of ſhockes; a ſlye ſervaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in cauſes of thynges, was more hardier in the firſte ſechers, and ſo ſayth Ariſtotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther paſſing ſtudy han freſhed our wittes, and oure underſtandynge han excited in conſideracion of trouth by ſharpnes of ther reſons. Utterly theſe thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of meſure was boiſtous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind aſketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean ſe ſo to ariſe unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to ſpill all the erthe.

The Prologues of the Canterrury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his ſhouris ſote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in ſuch licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his ſwetè breth
Enſpirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halvè cours yrunn:
And ſmalè foulis makin melodye,
That ſlepin allè night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to ſekin ſtrangè ſtrondes,
To ſervin hallowes couth in ſondry londes;
And ſpecially fro every ſhir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy bliſsfull martyr for to ſeke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were ſeke.
Befell that in that ſeſon on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hoſtery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of ſundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaſhip; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the ſtablis werin wide,
And well we werin eſid at the beſt:
And ſhorily whan the ſunnè was to reſt,
So had I ſpokin with them everych one,
That I was of her felaſhip anone;
And madè forward erli for to riſe,
To take our weye, ther as I did deviſe.
But nathleſs while that I have time and ſpace,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reſon,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, ſo as it ſemid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I firſt begin.

The Knight.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he firſt began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curteſy.
Full worthy was he in his lordis werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Chriſtendom, as in Hethneſs;
And evyr honoured for his worthineſs.
At Aleſſandre he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè nacions in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Chriſten-man ſo oft of his degree
In Granada; in the ſege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete ſee
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he been fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Trameſene,
In liſtis thrys, and alwey ſlein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight had ben alſo
Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a ſov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wiſe;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevir yet no villany ne ſaid
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay,
Of fuſtian he werid a gipon,
Allè beſmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.

The First Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you ſaied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to ſlepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aſlepè wondir ſone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè milis two
To the corps of ſainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that erſt was harde.
But as me ſlept me mette I was
Within a temple' imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, ſtandyng in ſondrie ſtages,

Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacels,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I ſawe evir.
But certainly I n'iſt nevir
Where that it was, but well wiſt I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I ſawe anone right her figure
Nakid yfletyng in a ſe,
And alſo on her hedde parde
Her roſy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè ſonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus written on a table' of bras.
I woll now ſyng, if that I can,
The armis, and alſo the man,
That firſt came through his deſtine
Fugitiſe fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the ſtrondis of Lavine,
And tho began the ſtorie' anone,
As I ſhall tellin you echone.
Firſt ſawe I the diſtruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falſe untrue forſwerynges,
And with his chere and his leſynges,
That made a horſe, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loſte all their joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions caſtill aſſailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain,
And Polites his ſonne certain,
Diſpitouſly of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that ſawe I howe Venus,
When that ſhe ſawe the caſtill brende,
Doune from hevin ſhe gan diſcende,
And bade her ſonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he
Eſcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchiſes,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchiſes in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then ſawe I next that all in fere
How Creuſa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong ſonne clepid Iulo,
And eke Aſcanius alſo,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreſt as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went
Creüſa was iloſte, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her ſought, and how her ghoſte
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoſte,
And ſaied he muſt into Itaile,
As was his deſtinie, ſauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her ſpirite gan appere,
The wordis that ſhe to hym ſaied,
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied.
There ſawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his ſhippis began to faile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As ſtreight as ere thei mightin go.
There ſawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haſt ihatid all thy life
Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he ſhould ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of ther ſavacion.
There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe,
That evèry herte might agriſe
To ſe it painted on the wall.
There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Ypraid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

Gode counſaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the preſe and dwell with ſothfaſtneſſe,
Suffiſe unto thy gode though it be ſmall,
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilneſſe,
Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more than the behovin ſhall,
Rede well thy ſelf, that othir folke canſt rede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.
Painè the not eche crokid to redreſſe,
In truſt of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete reſt ſtandith in litil buſineſſe,
Beware alſo to ſpurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy ſelf that demiſt othir's dede,
And trouthe the ſhall deliver it 'is no drede.
That the is ſent receve in buxomeneſſe ;
The wraſtlyng of this worlde aſkith a fall ;
Here is no home, here is but wildirneſſe,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o beſt out of thy ſtall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luſte and let thy ghoſt the lede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir, it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

THIS wretchid world'is tranſmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due diſcrecion
Govirnid is by fortun'is errour,
But nathèleſſe the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me ſyng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labeur
For finally fortune I do defie.
Yet is me left the ſight of my reſoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truily no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymſelf hath maiſtrie,
My ſuffiſaunce yſhal be my ſuccour,
For finally fortune I do defie.

O Socrates, thou ſtedfaſt champion,
  She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddiſt her oppreſſion,
  Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
  Thou knewe wele the diſceipt of her colour,
    And that her moſte worſhip is for to lie,
  I knowe her eke a falſe diſſimulour,
    For finally fortune I do defie.

The anſwere of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymſelf it wene,
  He that yhath hymſelf hath ſuffiſaunce,
Why ſaieſt thou then I am to the ſo kene,
  That haſt thy ſelf out of my govirnaunce?
  Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
    That thou haſt lent or this, thou ſhalt not ſtrive,
  What woſt thou yet how I the woll avaunce?
  And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.
I have the taught diviſion betwene
  Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the gallè of an hine,
  That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
  Now ſeeſt thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
    Yet holt thine anker, and thou maieſt arive
  There bountie bereth the key of my ſubſtaunce,
    And eke thou haſte thy beſtè frende alive.
How many have I refuſed to ſuſtene,
  Sith I have the foſtrid in thy pleſaunce?
Wolt thou then make a ſtatute on thy quene,
  That I ſhall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
  Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
    About the whele with othir muſt thou drive
  My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
    And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.

The anſwere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adverſitie,
  My frend maiſt thou not revin blind goddeſſe,
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
  Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a preſſe,
  The nigardis in kepyng ther richeſſe
    Pronoſtike is thou wolt ther toure aſſaile,
  Wicke appetite cometh aie before ſickneſſe,
    In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchiſt at my mutabilitie,
  For I the lent a droppe of my richeſſe,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
  Why ſhouldiſt thou my roialtie oppreſſe?
  The ſe maie ebbe and flowin more and leſſe,
    The welkin hath might to ſhine, rain, and haile,
  Right ſo muſt I kithin my brotilneſſe,
    In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execucion of the majeſtie,
  That all purveighith of his rightwiſeneſſe,
That ſamè thyng fortune yclepin ye,
  Ye blindè beſtis full of leudèneſs!
  The heven hath propirtie of ſikirneſs,
    This worldè hath evir reſtleſſe travaile,
  The laſt daie is the ende of myne entreſſe,
    In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilneſſe,
  Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
  And I ſhall quitin you this buſineſſe,
    And if ye liſte releve hym of his pain,
  Praie ye his beſt frende of his nobleneſſe
    That to ſome bettir ſtate he maie attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of the Fall of Princes a few ſtanzas are collected, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on ſoote,
  And hath none horſe to releue his trauayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thruſt doth hym aſſayle,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym auayle,
Tight ſo fare I which in my buſineſſe,
No ſuccour fynde my rudenes to redreſſe.
  I meane as thus, I haue no freſh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhethorike no floure,
In my labour for to refreſh me:
Nor of the ſuſters in noumber thriſe three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaſo dwell,
They neuer me gaue drinke once of their wel.
  Nor of theyr ſpringes clere and chriſtaline,
That ſprange by touchyng of the Pegaſe,
Their fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of ſo great ſcarcitie,
To tame their tunnes with ſome drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.
  Our life here ſhort of wit the great dulnes
The heuy ſoule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glaſyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a ſtrong batail
With werines my ſpirite to aſſayle,
And with their ſubtil creping in moſt queint
Hath made my ſpirit in makyng for to feint.
  And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my ſtepmother called obliuion,
Hath a baſtyll of foryetfulnes,
To ſtoppe the paſſage, and ſhadow my reaſon
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In tranſlating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
  Thus was I ſet and ſtode in double werre
At the metyng of fearefull wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer liſt to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me conſtrayne,
Bochas taccompliſh for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to reſt I durſt not procede.

Forteſcue was chief juſtice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471, after the battle of Tewkeſbury, and probably wrote moſt of his works in his privacy. The following paſſage is ſelected from his book of the Difference between an abſolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by ſome men, why one Realme is a Lordſhyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordſchip, Royal and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd Jus Politicum & Regale; ſythen thes two Princes beth of egall Aſtate.

To this dowte it may be anſweryd in this manner; The firſt Inſtitution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cauſe of this diverſyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the firſt Realme, and ſubduyd it to hymſelf by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accompliſhment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppreſſyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robuſtus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beſte for to ſele and eate hym; ſo Nembroth ſubduyd to him the People with Might, to have their ſervice and their goods, uſing upon them the Lordſchip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid firſt a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then moſt reſemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Cryſtyn Princes uſen the ſame Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys ſayen, Quod Principi plaucit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I ſuppoſe firſt beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, when Mankynd was more manſuete, and better diſpoſyd to Vertue, Grete Communalties, as was the Feliſhip, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philoſopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts muſt needs have an Heed; than they choſe the ſame Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Inſtitution, and onyng of themſelf into a Realme, ordeynyd the ſame Realme ſo to be rulyd and juſtyſyd by ſuch Lawys, as they al would aſſent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycauſe it is mynyſtrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quaſi Regimen, plurium Scientia, ſive Conſilio miniſtratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Sycuius ſaith, in his Boke de priſcis Hiſtoriis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the ſame Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Aſſent of his People. And in like forme as he ſaith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And alſo the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordſhip, the ſayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayſith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more ſewerly do Juſtice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is alſo good for his People that receyve therby, ſuch Juſtice as they deſyer themſelf. Now as me ſeymith, it ys ſhewyd opinly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Deſier and Inſtitution of the People of the ſame Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was neceſſary to give a larger ſpecimen, both becauſe our language was then in a great degree formed and ſettled, and becauſe it appears from Ben Johnſon, that his works were conſidered as models of pure and elegant ſtyle. The tale which is placed firſt, becauſe earlieſt written, will ſhow what an attentive reader will, in peruſing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffuſed among thoſe claſſes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has ſuffered very little change. There is another reaſon why the extracts from this authour are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better truſted than any other edition of the Engliſh books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry ieſt how a ſergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maiſter Thomas More in his youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and ſay,
That beſt is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The buſines that he can,
And in no wyſe,
To enterpryſe,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no ſkyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath lafte,
The hoſiers crafte,
And falleth to making ſhone,
The ſmythe that ſhall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng ſcole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene ſhall proue a fole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kyſſe the cup,
With her phiſick,
Wil kepe one ſicke,
Tyll ſhe have ſouſed hym vp.
A man of lawe,
That neuer ſawe,
The wayes to bye and ſell,
Wenyng to ryſe,
By marchaundiſe,
I wiſh to ſpede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo ſeke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in ſute,
Tyll he diſpute,
His money cleane away,
Pletyng the lawe,
For euery ſtrawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and ſtrife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go ſmatter,
In philoſophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar,
In theology,

All that enſue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue ſo farre a caſt,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Beſhrewe themſelfe at laſt.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
Here by a ſergeaunt late,
That thriftly was,
Or he coulde pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See how he could,
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe howe it fyll,
Take hede and ye ſhall here.
It happed ſo,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd aſide:
His ſonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all:
But to ſuffiſe
His chylde, well thriſe,
That money was to ſmal.
Yet or this day
I have hard ſay,
That many a man certeſſe,
Hath with good caſt,
Be ryche at laſt,
That hath begonne with leſſe.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
To ſee it was a joy,
For leſt ſum blaſt,
Myght ouer caſt,
His ſhip, or by miſchaunce,
Men with ſum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And miniſh his ſubſtaunce,
For to put out,
Al maner dout,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
Firſt fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetouſly,
He ſupped it fayre vp,
In his owne breſt,
He thought it beſt,
His money to encloſe,
Then wiſt he well,
What euer fell,
He coulde it neuer loſe.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundiſe:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyſe.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he ſpent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miſcontent.
With luſty ſporte,
And with reſort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had ſworne,
Some man is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And ſo was he,
For ſuch degre,
He gat and ſuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A ſergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy ſtrayte,
On him to wayte,
As ſone as on the mayre.
But he doubtleſſe,
Of his mekeneſſe,
Hated ſuch pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied ſo,
But drewe himſelf a ſide,
To ſaint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
There would he nedes abyde.
There ſpent he faſt,
Till all were paſt,
And to him came there meny,
To aſke theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With viſage ſtout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was faine,
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wiſt not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So ſick alway,
He myght not come abrode.

It happed than,
A marchant man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
Than gan enquere,
What him was beſt to do.
And he anſwerde,
Be not aferde,
Take an accion therfore,
I you beheſte,
I ſhall hym reſte,
And than care for no more.
I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The ſergeaunt ſaid,
Be not afrayd,
It ſhall be brought about.
In many a game,
Lyke to the ſame,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your ſake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He ſpake and looked,
So religiouſly.
Yet in a glaſſe,
Or he would paſſe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his ſyde,
To ſee how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten ſhame
To do this dede,
But now take hede,
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And ſoftely,
Streyght at the dore he knocked :
And a damſell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere ſayd,
Good ſpede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth ſuch a man,
It is told me :
Well ſyr quod ſhe,
And yf he do what than
Quod he mayſtreſſe,
No harme doutleſſe :
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne ſpeake would I.
Sir quod ſhe by my fay,
He is ſo ſike,
Ye be not lyke,
To ſpeake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my deſire,
Voucheſafe to do,
As go hym to,
And ſay an auſten frere
Would with hym ſpeke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod ſhe I wyll,
Stonde ye here ſtyll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is ſhe go,
And told hym ſo,
As ſhe was bode to ſay,
He miſtruſtying,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way,
And fetch him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,
Vp ſhe hym brought,
No harme ſhe thought,
But it made ſome folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Religiouſly and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande,
The frere than ſayd,
Ye be diſmayd,
With trouble I underſtande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is.
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet ſhall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counſayle yf you pleaſe,
Or ellys nat
Of matters that,
Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaunt ſayd,
Now ſay on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full ſore to here.
Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I reſt the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace :
Thou ſhalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goeſt not hence,
For all the penſe,
The mayre hath in his pouche.

This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
  He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horſon thefe,
With a miſchefe,
  Who hath taught the thy good.
And with his fiſt,
Vpon the lyſt,
  He gaue hym ſuch a blow,
That backward downe,
Almoſt in ſowne,
  The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man,
Well fearder than,
  Leſt he the frere had ſlayne,
Tyll with good rappes,
And heuy clappes,
  He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere toke harte,
And vp he ſtarte,
  And well he layde about,
And ſo there goth,
Betwene them both,
  Many a luſty clout.
They rent and tere,
Eche others here,
  And claue togyder faſt,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with tuggyng,
  They fell downe bothe at laſt.
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
  With many a ſadde ſtroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
  As pygges do in a poke.
So long aboue,
They heue and ſhoue,
  Togider that at laſt,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the ſtrife,
  Hyed them vpward faſt.
And whan they ſpye,
The captaynes lye,
  Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
  Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
  Lent hym leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
  With a great batyldore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
  She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
  She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
  That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a ſwappe,
  Tyll he was full nygh ſlayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
  Hedlyng a long the ſtayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And ſayde adewe,
  Commende us to the mayre.
The frere aroſe,
But I ſuppoſe,
  Amaſed was his hed,
He ſhoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
  He thought him well yfled.
Quod he now loſt,
Is all this coſt,
  We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That cauſed me,
  To make myſelf a frere.
Now maſters all,
Here now I ſhall,
  Ende there as I began,
In any wyſe,
I would auyſe,
  And counſayle euery man,
His owne craft vſe,
All newe refuſe,
  And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
  And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (writen by maſter Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Eliſabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the ſeuenth, and eldeſt doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Eliſabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the ſeuenth.

O Ye that put your truſt and confidence,
In worldly ioy and frayle proſperite
That ſo lyue here as ye ſhould neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vppon me.
Enſaumple I thynke there may no better be.
Your ſelfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
  Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene, my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleaſaunt thyng?
Mercifull God this is a ſtraunge reckenyng:
Rycheſſe, honour, welth, and aunceſtry,
Hath me forſaken and lo now here I ly.
  If worſhip myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me ſaued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty meſſangere,
Obey we muſt there is no remedy,
Me hath he ſommoned, and lo now here I ly.
  Yet was I late promiſed otherwyſe,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.
Lo where to commeth thy blandiſhyng promyſe,
O falſe aſtrolagy and deuynatrice,
Of goddes ſecretes makyng thy ſelfe ſo wyſe.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet laſteth, and lo nowe here I ly.
  O bryttill welth, as full of bitterneſſe,
Thy ſingle pleaſure doubled is with payne.
Account my ſorow firſt and my diſtreſſe,
In ſondry wyſe, and recken there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare ſayne,

For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wo then welth, and lo now here I ly.
Where are our caſtels, now where are our towers,
Goodly Rychmonde ſone art thou gone from me,
At Weſtminſter that coſtly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now ſhall I neuer ſee.
Almighty God voucheſafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.
Adew myne owne dere ſpouſe my worthy lorde,
The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peaſable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane reſyne,
To be beſtowed vppon your children and myne.
Erſt wer you father, and now muſt ye ſupply,
The mothers part alſo, for lo now here I ly.
Farewell my doughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye ſhould go where we ſhould ſeldome mete.
Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we leaſt feare, full oft it is moſt nye,
From you depart I fyrſt, and lo now here I lye.
Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your ſonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chyld ſo dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my ſoule, for lo now here I ly.
Adew lord Henry my louyng ſonne adew.
Our lorde encreaſe your honour and eſtate,
Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyfe and fortunate.
Adew ſwete hart my litle doughter Kate,
Thou ſhalt ſwete babe ſuche is thy deſteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.
Lady Cicyly Anne and Katheryne,
Farewell my welbeloved ſiſters three,
O lady Briget other ſiſter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.
Adew my lordes, adew my ladies all,
Adew my faithful ſeruauntes euerych one,
Adew my commons whom I neuer ſhall
See in this world, wherfore to the alone,
Immortall God verely three and one,
I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy ſeruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in Engliſh written by maſter Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and cauſed them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high eſtate power and auctoritie,
If ye ne know, enſerche and ye ſhall ſpye,
That richeſſe, worſhip, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, reſt, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleaſure or profit may come by,
To mannes comfort, ayde, and ſuſtinaunce,
Is all at my deuyſe and ordinaunce.
Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at laſt,
To good concluſion, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpoſe, bounden ſure and faſt
With wiſe prouiſion, I haue ouercaſt.
Without good happe there may no ſuffiſe.
Better is to be fortunate than wyſe.
And therefore hath there ſome men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my diſprayſe. And other cauſe there nys,
But for me liſt not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forſoke,
The pleaſaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Becauſe he lept and yet could not come by them.
But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richeſſe,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in diſtreſſe,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortleſſe,
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him ſelfe both.
But he that by my fauour may aſcende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how bliſt condicion ſtandeth he:
Him ſelf in honour and felicite,
And ouer that, may forther and increaſe,
A region hole in ioyfull reſt and peace.
Now in this poynt there is no more to ſay,
Eche man hath of him ſelf the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and miſchaunce,
Liſt for to liue, and wyll him ſelfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richeſſe, come forth and wayte on me.
And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

Thomas More to them that truſt in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour, ſhape or kynne,
That hepeſt vp this wretched worldes treaſure,
Thy fingers ſhrined with gold, thy tawny ſkynne,
With freſh apparyle garniſhed out of meaſure,
And weneſt to have fortune at thy pleaſure,
Caſt vp thyne eye, and loke how ſlipper chaunce,
Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.
Sometyme ſhe loketh as louely, fayre and bright,
As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketh and ſhe ſmileth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.
Like any ſerpent ſhe beginneth to ſwell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.
Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and ſo blynde)
As ſoone as Fortune liſt to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenaunce and diſceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thouſandes in a rout,
Lyke ſwarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.
Then as a bayte ſhe bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ſtone:
On whiche the maſed people gaſe and ſtare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treaſure and waueryng rycheſſe,
Prowdly ſhe houeth as lady and empreſſe.
Faſt by her ſyde doth wery labour ſtand,
Pale fere alſo, and ſorow all bewept,
Diſdayn and hatred on that other hand,
Eke reſtles watche fro ſlepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowſy and lokyng as he ſlept.
Before her ſtandeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dyſceyt, miſchiefe and tiranny.
About her commeth all the world to begge.
He aſketh lande, and he to pas would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:

He would in loue proſper aboue all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not ſo he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompt hym for a knaue.
Lo thus ye ſee diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnſtable here and there among them flittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who ſo may ſhe throweth great and ſmall
Not to all men, as commeth ſonne or dewe,
But for the moſt part, all among a fewe.
And yet her brotell giftes long may not laſt.
He that ſhe gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirlth about and pluckth away as faſt,
And geueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vſeth to geue and take, and ſlily toſſe,
One man to wynnyng of an others loſſe.
And when ſhe robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curſeth her full ſore.
But he that receueth it, on that other ſyde,
Is glad, and bleſth her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when ſhe loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to,
And he her curſeth, as other fooles do.
Alas the folyſh people can not ceaſe,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, beſely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym ſelf full wele.
That may ſet once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth faſt: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.
Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perſe.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherſe.
Thus double fortune, when ſhe lyſt reuerſe
Her ſlipper fauour fro them that in her truſt,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the duſt.
She ſodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And ſodeynly miſcheueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay eaſily and full ſoft,
In ſtede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the moſt cruell proude mocke:
The deynty mowth that ladyes kiſſed haue,
She bryngeth in the caſe to kyſſe a knaue.
In chaungyng of her courſe, the chaunge ſhewth this,
Vp ſtartth a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to deſpyght.
This is her ſport, thus proueth ſhe her myght.
Great boſte ſhe maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.
Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,
And ſeeth how fortunes houſhold goeth to wrake.
Faſt by her ſtandeth the wyſe Socrates.
Arriſtippus, Pythagoras, and many a leſe
Of olde philoſophers. And eke agaynſt the ſonne
Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.
With her is Byas, whoſe countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes ſtode ſo in dout,
That eche man haſtely gan to cary thence,
And aſked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wiſedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leeſe.
Heraclitus eke, lyſt felowſhip to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus alſo:
Of which the fyrſt can neuer ceaſe but wepe,
To ſee how thick the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchaſe care and wo.
That other laugheth to ſee the foolyſh apes,
Howe earneſtly they walk about theyr capes.
Of this poore ſect, it is comen vſage,
Onely to take that nature may ſuſtayne,
Baniſhing cleane all other ſurpluſage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good ſo fayne.
But they more pleaſure haue a thouſande folde,
The ſecrete draughtes of nature to beholde.
Set fortunes ſervauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full.
That one in ſuretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyſt to aduiſe them bothe, parceyue he ſhall,
As great difference between them as we ſee,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicite.
Nowe haue I ſhewed you bothe: theſe whiche ye lyſt,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to ſay, nowe lyeth it in your fyſt,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to pleaſe,
If that ye thynke your ſelfe to well at eaſe.
And fyrſt vppon the louely ſhall ſhe ſmile,
And frendly on the caſt her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradiſe:
And foorth with all what ſo thou lyſt deuiſe,
She wyll the graunt it liberally parhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.
Recken you neuer of her fauoure ſure:
Ye may in clowds as eaſily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cauſe fiſhes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to ſpare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine ſtable,
That of her nature is euer variable.
Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any ſeruaunt may,
And in concluſion, that thou ſhalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy ſervyce I dare ſay.
And looke yet what ſhe geueth the to day,
With labour wonne ſhe ſhall happly to morow
Pluck it agayne out of thyne hande with ſorow.
Wherefore yf thou in ſuretye lyſt to ſtande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayſt thou boldly defye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.
But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treaſure,
Truſt not therein, and ſpende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of meaſure,
Bylde not thyne houſe on heyth vp in the ſkye.
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature ſent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that ſeke Fortune.

WHO ſo delyteth to prouen and aſſay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunſwere pleaſe you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to truſt, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fiſt,
She renneth looſe, and turneth where ſhe lyſt.

The rollyng dyſe in whome your lucke doth ſtande,
With whoſe vnhappy chaunce ye be ſo wroth,
Ye knowe your ſelfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyſhe and frogges both.
Caſt in your nette: but be you liefe or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyſt aſſyne:
For it is your owne fiſhyng and not myne.
And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other ſhe ſhall it amende.
There is no manne ſo farre out of her grace,
But he ſometyme hath comfort and ſolace:
Ne none agayne ſo farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full ſatisfyed with her behauiour.
Fortune is ſtately, ſolemne, prowde, and hye:
And rycheſſe geueth, to haue ſeruyce therefore.
The nedy beggar catcheth an halfpeny:
Some man a thouſande pounde, ſome leſſe ſome more.
But for all that ſhe kepeth euer in ſtore,
From euery manne ſome parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and ſerue her ſtyll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some manne hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of ſtelth.
To ſome ſhe ſendeth, children, ryches welthe,
Honour, woorſhyp, and reuerence all hys life:
But yet ſhe pyncheth hym with a ſhrewde wyfe.
Then for aſmuch as it is fortunes guyſe,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her ſelf lyſt order and deuyſe,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counſayle you eche one truſſe vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With ſuche rewarde as fortune hath you ſent.
All thynges in this boke that ye ſhall rede,
Doe as ye lyſt, there ſhall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as ſurely as your crede.
But notwithſtandyng certes in my mynde,
I durſt well ſwere, as true ye ſhall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche anſwere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of aſtronomye.

The Deſcripcion of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third ſonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and prowceſſe farre vnder them bothe, little of ſtature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left ſhoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of viſage, and ſuch as is in ſtates called warlye, in other menne otherwiſe, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had ſo much a doe in her trauaile, that ſhee coulde not bee deliuered of hym vncutte: and that hee came into the worlde with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) alſo not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her courſe in hys beginninge, whiche in the courſe of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his diſpoſicion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and ſommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parſone, either of hardineſſe or polytike order, free was hee called of dyſpenſe, and ſommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnſtedfaſte frendeſhippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and ſpoyle in other places, and get him ſtedfaſt hatred. Hee was cloſe and ſecrete, a deepe diſſimuler, lowlye of counteynaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kiſſe whome hee thoughte to kyll: diſpitious and cruell, not for euil will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the ſuretie or encreaſe of his eſtate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he ſpared no mans deathe, whoſe life withſtoode his purpoſe. He ſlewe with his owne handes king Henry the ſixt, being priſoner in the Tower, as menne conſtantly ſaye, and that without commaundement or knoweledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to ſome other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wiſe menne alſo weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee reſiſted openly, howbeit ſomwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that caſe the king his brother (whoſe life hee looked that euill dyete ſhoulde ſhorten) ſhoulde happen to deceaſe (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whoſe life muſt nedes haue hindered hym ſo entendynge, whither the ſame duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterpriſed to be kyng himſelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoſo diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel ſhote to farre as to ſhort. Howbeit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the ſelfe nighte in whiche kynge Edwarde died, one Myſtlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haſte to the houſe of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecroſſe ſtrete without Crepulgate: and when he was with haſtye rappyng quickly letten in, hee ſhewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Potter then wyll my mayſter the duke of Glouceſter bee kynge. What cauſe hee hadde ſoo to thynke harde it is to ſaye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thynge knewe that hee ſuche thynge purpoſed, or otherwyſe had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likelye to ſpeake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the courſe of this hyſtorye, were it that the duke of Glouceſter hadde of old foreminded this concluſion, or was nowe at erſte thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occaſion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of ſpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deſtruccion, with the vſurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymſelfe. And for as muche as hee well witte and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuiſion ſhoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the purſuite of his intente, and a ſure ground for the foundacion of al his building yf he might firſte vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde diſpleaſure, abuſe the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the deſtruccion of the tother: and then to wynne to his purpoſe as manye as he coulde: and thoſe that coulde not be wonne, myght be loſte ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he ſhold ſoone haue made peace beetwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this diſcencion beetwene hys frendes ſommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health he ſommewhat the leſſe regarded it, becauſe hee thought whatſoeuer buſines ſhoulde falle betwene them, hymſelfe ſhould alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laſt ſickneſſe, when hee receiued his naturall ſtrengthe ſoo ſore enfebled, that hee dyſpayred all recouerye, then hee conſyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge leſſe miſtruſted then that that happened, yet well forſeynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children ſhoulde lacke diſcrecion of themſelf and good counſayle of their frendes, of whiche either party ſhold counſayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleaſaunte aduyſe too wynne themſelfe fauour, then by profitable aduertiſemente to do the children good, he called ſome of them before him that were at variaunce, and in eſpecyall the lorde marques Dorſette the quenes ſonne by her fyrſte houſebande, and Richarde the lorde Haſtynges, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene ſpecially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alſo for that ſhee thoughte hym ſecretely familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred alſo bare hym ſore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyſe as for diuerſe other great giftes which hee receyued, that they loked for. When theſe lordes with diuerſe other of bothe the parties were comme in preſence, the kynge liftinge vppe himſelfe and vnderſette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyſe ſayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinſmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you ſee, and I feele. By whiche the leſſe whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what caſe I leaue you, for ſuch as I leaue you, ſuche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they ſhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall themſelfe at warre ere their diſcrecion woulde ſerue to ſette you at peace. Ye ſe their youthe, of whiche I recken the onely ſuretie to reſte in youre concord. For it ſuffiſeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulneſſe happelye woulde ſuffiſe. But childehood muſt be maintained by mens authoritye, and ſlipper youth vnderpropped with elder counſayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For whe reche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others parſon, impugneth eche others counſayle, there muſt it nedes bee long ere anye good concluſion goe forwarde. And alſo while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery ſhall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyſe, of whyche muſte needes enſue the euyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whoſe mynd in tender youth infect, ſhal redily fal to miſchief and riot, and drawe down with this noble realme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wiſdom: which if God ſend, then thei that by euill menes before pleaſed him beſt, ſhal after fall fartheſt out of fauour, ſo that euer at length euill driftes drene to nought, and good plain wayes proſper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great cauſes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our miſconſtruccion turneth vnto worſe or a ſmal diſpleaſure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had ſo great cauſe of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be chriſten men, this ſhall I leaue for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this ſhal I deſire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kinred or affinitie, whiche ſpirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the ſacramentes of Chriſtes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde thei did, ſhoulde no leſſe moue vs to charitye, then the reſpecte of fleſhlye conſanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worſe, for the ſelfe cauſe that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee ſo deadlye debate, as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moſte oughte to agree together. Suche a peſtilente ſerpente is ambicion and deſyre of vaine glorye and ſoueraintye, whiche amonge ſtates where he once entreth crepeth foorth ſo farre, tyll with deuiſion and variaunce hee turneth all to miſchiefe. Firſte longing to be nexte the beſt, afterwarde egall with the beſte, and at laſte chiefe and aboue the beſte. Of which immoderate appetite of woorſhip, and thereby of debate and diſſencion what loſſe, what ſorowe, what trouble hathe within theſe fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as wee well remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue foreſene, as I haue with my more payne then pleaſure proued, by Goddes bleſſed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courteſye of mennes knees, with the loſſe of ſoo many heades. But ſithen thynges paſſed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occaſion we haue taken ſoo greate hurte afore, that we eftesoones fall not in that occaſion agayne. Nowe be thoſe griefes paſſed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to proſper in wealthfull peace vnder youre coſeyns my children, if Godde ſende them life and you loue. Of whyche twoo thinges, the leſſe loſſe wer they by whome thoughe Godde dydde hys pleaſure, yet ſhoulde the realme alway finde kinges and paraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among youre ſelfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man ſhall periſh and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherfore in theſe laſt wordes that euer I looke to ſpeak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer born to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truſte you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne ſurety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to ſitte vp, laide him down on his right ſide, his face towarde them: and none was there preſent that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and anſwering for the time as thei thought to ſtand with his pleaſure, there in his preſence (as by their wordes appered) ech forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a ſonder. As ſone as the king was departed, the noble prince his ſonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceaſe, kept his houſhold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourſe to iuſtice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheaſon the prince was in the life of his father ſente thither, to the end that the authoritie of his preſence, ſhould refraine euill diſpoſed parſons fro the boldnes of their former outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his ſending thyther, was there appointed Sir Antony Woduile lord Riuers and brother vnto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counſayle. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the ſame partie, and in effect euery one as he was nereſt of kin vnto the quene, ſo was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the quene not vnwiſely deuiſed, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Glouceſter turned vnto their deſtruccion, and vpon that grounde ſet the foundacion of all his vnhappy building. For whom ſoeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himſelf their fauor, hee brake vnto them, ſome by mouth, ſom by writing and ſecret meſſengers, that it neyther was reaſon nor in any wiſe to be ſuffered, that the yong king their maſter and kinſmanne, ſhoold bee in the handes and cuſtodye of his mothers kinred, ſequeſtred in maner from theyr compani and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful ſeruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers ſide: whoſe blood (quod he) ſauing the kinges pleaſure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who ſay remoued from the kyng, and the leſſe noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys mageſtie, nor vnto vs, and alſo to his grace no ſurety to haue the mightieſt of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to ſuffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and ſone perſwaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himſelf, albeit he was a manne of age and of diſcrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then ſtode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them ſelfe. Whiche whither they ſorer thirſted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to geſſe. And if ſome folkes frendſhip had not holden better place with the king, then any reſpect of kinred, thei might peraduenture eaſily haue be trapped and brought to confuſion ſomme of vs ere this. Why not as eaſily as they haue done ſome other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is paſte. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee ſuffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abuſe the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouiſion forbyd. Of which good prouiſion none of us hath any thing the leſſe nede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleaſure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is ſo vnwyſe, ouerſone to truſte a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, ſodainely contract in one houre continued, yet ſcant a fortnight, ſhold be deper ſetled in their ſtomackes: then a long accuſtomed malice many yeres rooted.

With theſe wordes and writynges and ſuche other, the duke of Glouceſter ſone ſet a fyre, them that were of themſelf ethe to kindle, and in eſpeciall twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Haſtinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe ſucceſſion from his anceſtrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. Theſe two not bearing eche to other ſo muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Glouceſter, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kynges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Glouceſter vnderſtandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accoumpanied with ſuche power of theyr frendes, that it ſhoulde bee harde for hym to brynge his purpoſe to paſſe, without the gathering and great aſſemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wiſte was doubtuous, and in which the kyng being on their ſide, his part ſhould haue the face and name of a rebellion: he ſecretly therefore by diuers meanes, cauſed the quene to be perſwaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and alſo ſhold be ieopardous, the king to come vp ſtrong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing ſtudyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred ſhold aſſemble in the kinges name muche people, thei ſhould geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene ſommetyme debate, to feare and ſuſpecte, leſte they ſhoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges ſauegarde whome no manne empugned, but for theyr deſtruccion, hauying more regarde to their olde variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cauſe thei ſhoulde aſſemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whoſe power ſhe wyſte wel farre ſtretched. And thus ſhould all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof ſhould enſue, which was likely not to be litle, and the moſt harme there like to fal wher ſhe leſt would, all the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and ſay that thei had vnwyſelye and vntrewlye alſo, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her huſband ſo prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obſerued.

The quene being in this wiſe perſwaded, ſuche woorde ſente vnto her ſonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Glouceſter hymſelfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kynge ſoo reuerentelye, and to the queenes frendes, there ſoo louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye myſtruſtynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate haſte, not in good ſpede, with a ſober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when theſe dukes of Glouceſter and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryuers the kynges vncle, entendyng on the morowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene theſe dukes and the lord Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courteſye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes ſecretelye with a fewe of their moſte priuye frendes, ſette them downe in counſayle, wherin they ſpent a great parte of the nyght. And at their riſinge in the dawnyng of the day, thei ſent about priuily to their ſeruantes in their innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them ſelfe ſhortely readye, for their lordes wer to horſebackward. Vppon whiche meſſages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers ſeruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde theſe dukes taken alſo into their cuſtodye the kayes of the inne, that none ſhoulde paſſe foorth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, they hadde beeſtowed certayne of theyr folke, that ſhoulde ſend backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they ſhould geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themſelfe entended for the ſhewe of theire dylygence, to bee the fyrſte that ſhoulde that daye attende vppon the kynges highneſſe oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderſtode the gates cloſed, and the wayes on euerye ſide beſette, neyther hys ſeruauntes nor hymſelf ſuffered to go oute, parceiuyng well ſo greate a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner preſent with this laſt nightes chere, in ſo few houres ſo gret a chaunge marueylouſlye miſliked. How be it ſithe hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe himſelfe cloſe, hee woulde not, leſte he ſhoulde ſeeme to hyde himſelfe for ſome ſecret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he ſaw no ſuch cauſe in hym ſelf: he determined vppon the ſuretie of his own conſcience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as ſoone as they ſawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and ſaye, that hee intended to ſette diſtaunce beetweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confuſion, but it ſhoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well ſpoken manne) in goodly wiſe to excuſe himſelf, they taryed not the ende of his aunſwere, but ſhortely tooke hym and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horſebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horſebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, becauſe it was to ſtreighte for bothe coumpanies. And as ſone as they came in his preſence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham ſaide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wiſe, ſalued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor miſtruſtinge as yet. But euen by and by in his preſence, they piked a quarell to the lorde Richard Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, ſayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpaſſed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to ſette variaunce among the ſtates, and to ſubdewe and deſtroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumpliſhinge whereof, they ſayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treaſor, and ſent menne to the ſea. All whiche thinge theſe dukes wiſte well were done for good purpoſes and neceſſari by the whole counſaile at London, ſauing that ſommewhat thei muſt ſai. Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunſwered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot ſaie. But in good faith I dare well aunſwere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any ſuch matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte theire dealing in theſe matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And foorthwith thei arreſted the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Waughan knighte, in the kinges preſence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counſaile. And there they ſent awaie from the kinge whom it pleaſed them, and ſette newe ſeruantes aboute him, ſuche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Glouceſter ſente a diſhe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all ſhould be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the meſſenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the ſame meſſage for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of comfort, as one to whom ſuch aduerſitie was ſtraunge. But himſelf had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therfore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courteſye of the duke of Glouceſter he ſent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to priſon, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in concluſion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys doughter maiſtres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was priſoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more deſyer then I haue. I beſeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And ſuch thynges as I ſomewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I truſte he dothe and better to by hys holy ſpirite: who bleſſe you and preſerue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all, nor your babes, nor your nurſes, nor your good huſbandes, nor your good huſbandes ſhrewde wyues, nor your fathers ſhrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two ſhort ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys paſtime while he was priſoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the loſt louer.

EY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer ſo fayre,
Or neuer ſo pleſantly begin to ſmile,
As though thou wouldſt my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou ſhalt me not begile.
Truſt ſhall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys hauen or heauen ſure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a ſtorme.

DAUY the dycer.

LONG was I lady Lucke your ſeruing man,
And now haue loſt agayne all that I gat,
Wherfore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beſhrew your cat,
But in fayth I bleſſe you agayne a thouſand times,
For lending me now ſome layſure to make rymes.

At the ſame time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whoſe works it ſeems proper to inſert a few ſtanzas, though he cannot be ſaid to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne whan the ſonne in vyrgyne
By radyante hete enryped hath our corne
Whan Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, ſmylynge halfe in ſcorne
At our foly, and our vnſtedfaſtneſſe
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres,
I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trouth, and cloke ſubtylly
With freſſhe vtteraunce full ſentencyouſly
Dyuerſe in ſtyle ſome ſpared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly dyd endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was ſore moued to a forſe the ſame
But ignoraunce full ſoone dyde me dyſcure
And ſhewed that in this arte I was not ſure
For to illumine ſhe ſayd I was to dulle
Aduyſynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he ſo wyll atteyne
Excedyng ferther than his connynge is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen ſuche er this
But of reproche ſurely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What and he ſlyde downe, who ſhall hym ſaue?

Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and caſt
That I ne wyſte what to do was beſte
So ſore enwered that I was at the laſte
Enforſed to ſlepe, and for to take ſome reſte
And to lye downe as ſoone as I my dreſte
At Harwyche porte ſlumbrynge as I laye
In myne hoſtes houſe called powers keye.

Of the wits that flouriſhed in the reign of Henry VIII none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry; and this hiſtory would therefore have been imperfect without ſome ſpecimens of his works, which yet it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh from thoſe of Sir Thomas Wyat and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three firſt are, I believe, Surry's; the reſt, being of the ſame age, are ſelected, ſome as examples of different meaſures, and one as the oldeſt compoſition which I have found in blank verſe.

Deſcription of Spring, wherein eche thing renewes, ſave only the lover.

THE ſoote ſeaſon that bud, and bloome fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new ſhe ſinges;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:
Somer is come, for every ſpray now ſpringes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fiſhes flete with newe repayred ſcale:
The adder all her ſlough away ſhe flynges,
The ſwift ſwallow purſueth the flyes ſmalle,
The buſy bee her honey how ſhe mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I ſee among theſe pleaſant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my ſorrow ſprynges.

Deſcripcion of the reſtleſs eſtate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides ſcourge had made me runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courſe begunne:
And then I ſaw howe my deſyre
Miſguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me loſe a better prey.
For when in ſighes I ſpent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling ſmoke dyd ſtill bewray,
The preſent heat of ſecret flame:
And when ſalt teares do bayne my breaſt,
Where love his pleaſent traynes hath ſown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes oppreſt,
Ere that the buddes were ſpronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd ſtill purſue,
The flying chaſe of theyre requeſt;
Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breſte.
When every loke theſe cheekes might ſtayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward ſignes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that elſe ſhould ſee
My ſpeckled chekes with Cupids hew.
And now the covert breſt I clame,
That worſhipt Cupide ſecretely:
And nouriſhed hys ſacred flame,
From whence no blairing ſparks do flye.

Deſcripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that moſt part in diſcord
Our willes do ſtand, whereby our hartes but ſeldom do accord:
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The ſimple hartes which he doth ſtrike with froward divers ſtroke.
He cauſeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.
Whoſe gleames of burning fyre and eaſy ſparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From eaſye ford where I myghte wade and paſs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell:
And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do beſeke of Grace;
He lettes me to purſue a conqueſt welnere wonne.
To follow where my paynes were loſt, ere that my ſute begunne.
So by this means I know how ſoon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to ſtryfe, and ſo agayne returne.
I know how to content my ſelf in others luſt,
Of little ſtuffe unto my ſelf to weave a webbe of truſt:
And how to hyde my harmes with ſole dyſſembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forſakes the face for dred,
And how by ſhame it ſtaynes agayne the Chekes with flamyng red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the reſtleſs forge I wote eke how it workes.
I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell
But ofte the wordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he ſhakes,
In ſynging howe he doth complayne, in ſleeping how he wakes
To languiſh without ache, ſickeleſſe for to conſume,
A thouſand thynges for to devyſe, reſolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyſte to ſee his Ladyes Grace full ſore
Such pleaſures as delyght his Eye, do not his helthe reſtore.
I know to ſeke the tracte of my deſyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do ſeek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers muſt transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with ſprite from Lyfe removed.
I knowe in harty ſighes and laughters of the ſpleene,
At once to chaunge my ſtate, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I know how to deceyve my ſelf wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chaſtiſed is, by beatynge of the whelpe.
In ſtandynge nere the fyre, I know how that I freaſe;
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waſte, and ſo my Lyfe I leeſe.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How ſmalle a nete may take and maſe a harte of gentle kynde:
Or elſe with ſeldom ſwete to ſeaſon bepes of gall,
Revived with a glympſe of Grace old ſorrowes to let fall.
The hydden traynes I know, and ſecret ſnares of Love,
How ſoone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.

The ſlypper ſtate I know, the ſodein turnes from welthe
The doubtfull hope, the certaine wooe, and ſure deſpaired helthe.

A praiſe of his ladie.

GEVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boaſt not your ſelves at all,
For here at hande approcheth one,
Whoſe face will ſtayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious ſtone,
I wiſhe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two chriſtall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart ſuffiſe
To ſee that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath loſt the moulde,
Where ſhe her ſhape did take;
Or elſe I doubte if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whoſe like was never ſeene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe ſhe is Diana chaſt
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede ſtedfaſt;
What will you more we ſay:
If all the world were ſought ſo farre,
Who could finde ſuche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a ſtarre
Within the froſty night.

The Lover refuſed of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeres are paſt,
My joyful days are gone,
My lyfe it may not laſt,
My grave and I am one.
My myrth and joyes are fled,
And I a man in wo,
Deſirous to be ded,
My miſciefe to forgo.
I burne and am a colde,
I freeſe amyddes the fyer,
I ſee ſhe doth witholde
That is my honeſt deſyre.
I ſee my helpe at hande,
I ſee my lyfe alſo,
I ſee where ſhe doth ſtande
That is my deadly fo.
I ſee how ſhe doth ſee,
And yet ſhe wil be blynde,
I ſee in helpyng me,
She ſekes and will not fynde.
I ſee how ſhe doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I ſee when I come nye,
How fayne ſhe would be gone.
I ſee what wil ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you ſhall ſee therfore
That ſhe ſhall have her will.
I cannot live with ſtones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian aſtronomer, in the firſt fight that Alexander had with the Perſians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan paſſe the noys of dredfull trumpetts clang,
Shrowded with ſhafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
Covered the ayre. Againſt full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whoſe greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons againſt the Perſians fare,
Now corpſes hyde the purpurde ſoyle with blood;
Large ſlaughter on eche ſide, but Perſes more,
Moyſt fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers bate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The litening Macedon by ſwordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his mereſt kyn,
Oxate preſerves with horſemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge ſhould give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where ſtrong youth is ſpent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perſes ſoweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yrent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym ſmytes the club, hym woundes farre ſtryking bowe,
And him the ſling, and him the ſhining ſword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he reſtes.
Right over ſtoode in ſnowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celeſtiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aſpect eclips,
And influence, and conſtellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty ſtorde, what ſigne forewarned death,
How winter gendreth ſnow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth ſeaſon well the ſoyle,
Why ſummer burnes, why autumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themſelves how great
Proportion is; what ſway the erryng lightes
Doth ſend in courſe gayne that fyrſt movyng heaven;
What, grees one from another diſtant be,
What ſtarr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what oppoſition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorſes fyre,
What houſe eche one doth ſeeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven ſphere, nor that ſmall thynges
I ſpeake, whole heaven he cloſeth in his breſt.
This ſage then in the ſtarres hath ſpyed the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, ſith,
He ſaw he could not fatall order chaunge,
Foreward he preſt in battayle, that he might
Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand deſirous to be ſlain,
The bouldeſt borne, and worthieſt in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And ſeking death, in fyrſt front of his rage,
Comes deſperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With reckleſſe wordes and clamour him provokes,
And ſayth, Nectanaks baſtard ſhamefull ſtayne
Of mothers bed, why loſeſt thou thy ſtrokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in caſe
Manhood there be ſo much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learninges laude,

And eke for martiall praiſe, that in my ſhielde
The ſeven fold Sophie of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr king, then any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with ſoft words ayen,
O monſtrous man (quoth he) what ſo thou art,
I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muſes manſion marre ;
That treaſure houſe this hand ſhall never ſpoyle,
My ſword ſhall never bruiſe that ſkilfull brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of ſcience ſone to ſpill ;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wiſdoms garden give ; how many may
By you the wiſer and the better prove :
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perſwades to be downe, ſent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flouriſh, nor no knowledge vailes
For all theſe ſawes. When thus the ſovereign ſaid,
Alighted Zoroas with ſword unſheathed,
The careleſs king there ſmoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quiſhes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground :
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnaſhe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wiſe
Hym to forbeare, ſette ſpurrs unto his ſtede,
And turnde away, leſt anger of his ſmarte
Should cauſe revenger hand deale balefull blowes.
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this ſight,
But ran upon the ſaid Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees : he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of ſouldiours ſterne,
And all in pieces hewed the ſely ſeg,
But happely the ſoule fled to the ſtarres,
Where, under him, he hath full ſight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Perſians waild ſuch ſapience to forgoe,
The very ſone the Macedonians wiſht
He would have lived, king Alexander ſelfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all ;
Who wonne like praiſe for conqueſt of his Yre,
As for ſtoute men in field that day ſubdued,
Who princes taught how to diſcerne a man,
That in his head ſo rare a jewel beares,
But over all thoſe ſame Camenes, thoſe ſame,
Divine Camenes, whoſe honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thankes, all that they can,
Do cheriſh hym deceaſt, and ſett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550 ; his chief work is the Ship of Fooles, of which the following extract will ſhew his ſtyle.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and falſe Accuſers.

O Heartleſs fooles, haſte here to our doctrine,
Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here ſhall I ſhewe you good and veritie :
Encline, and ye finde ſhall great proſperitie,
Enſuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, ſhall finde auauncement :
Wherfore ye fooles that in your ſinne are bolde,
Enſue ye wiſdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wiſdome is the way of men moſt excellent :
Therfore haue done, and ſhortly ſpede your pace,
To quaynt your ſelf and company with grace.
Learne what is vertue, therin is great ſolace,
Learne what is truth, ſadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchaſe,
Forſake your folly and inconuenience,
Ceaſe to be fooles, and ay to ſue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wiſedome is ground of clenlynes.
Wiſedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour ſpeciall,
But ſuche heartes as ſlepe in fooliſhnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all :
But in this little barge in principall
All fooliſh mockers I purpoſe to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.
Mockers and ſcorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which cauſeth great debate :
Suche caytiues ſpare neyther poore man nor eſtate,
And where their ſelfe are moſte worthy deriſion,
Other men to ſcorne is all their moſt condition.
Yet are mo fooles of this abuſion,
Whiche of wiſe men deſpiſeth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, ſcorne, and colluſion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good diſcipline :
Shewe to ſuche wiſdome, yet ſhall they not encline
Unto the ſame, but ſet nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, ſtill or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe ſhall he haue by and by :
Thus in deriſion haue fooles their ſpeciall game.
Correct a wiſe man that woulde eſchue ill name,
And fayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly ſhall intende.
If by misfortune a rightwiſe man offende,
He gladly ſuffereth a iuſte correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him ſelfe putting mekely unto ſubiection,
Folowing his preceptes and good direction :
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He ſhall his teacher hate, ſlaunder and diffame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own ſhame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And ſo is he ſore wounded with the ſame,
And in wo endeth, great miſery and payne.
It alſo proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes caſt,
Shall of all other be mocked at the laſt.
He that goeth right, ſtedfaſt, ſure, and faſt,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his ſcornes caſt,
Agaynſt a man of Inde : but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vſeth the ſame.
But who that of ſinne is cleane in deede and thought,
May him well ſcorne whoſe liuing is ſtarke nought.
The ſcornes of Naball full dere ſhould haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife diſcrete and ſage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes ſought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and aſſwage,
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyſeus did ſcorne.
So might they curſe the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine :
So many other of this ſort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it foly for wiſe men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for ſee thou ſhall
Them moſte ſcorning that are moſt bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in ſcorne ſet your ioy,
Proudly deſpiſing Gods punition:
Take ye example by Cham the ſonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto deriſion,
Which him after curſed for his tranſgreſſion,
And made him ſeruaunt to all his lyne and ſtocke.
So ſhall ye caytifs at the concluſion,
Since ye are nought, and other ſcorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilſon, a man celebrated for the politeneſs of his ſtyle, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the ſtate of our language in his time, the following may be of uſe to ſhow.

PRonunciation is an apte orderinge bothe of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of ſuche woordes and mater as by ſpeache are declared. The vſe hereof is ſuche for anye one that liketh to haue prayſe for tellynge his tale in open aſſemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he ſhal be thought to paſſe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: thoughe they haue much better learning. The tonge geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cauſe in like maner, as a ſwete ſoundynge lute muche ſetteth forthe a meane deuiſed ballade. Or as the ſounde of a good inſtrumente ſtyrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, ſo a cleare ſoundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche ſwete melodie, and cauſeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters ſake, then the reporter for the matters ſake. Demoſthenes therfore, that famouſe oratour, beyng aſked what was the chiefeſt point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praiſe to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the ſeconde, and the thirde, he ſtil made anſwere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunſwere, till they lefte aſkyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely geſture of his body. Æſchines lykwyſe beyng banniſhed his countrie through Demoſthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demoſthenes aunſwere thereunto, by force whereof he was banniſhed, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the ſame: then (q d Æſchines) you would have marueiled muche more if you had heard hymſelfe ſpeak it. Thus beyng caſt in miſerie and baniſhed for euer, he could not but geue ſuche great reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

Thus have I deduced the Engliſh language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in ſome parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at leaſt, in ſuch a manner that its progreſs may be eaſily traced, and the gradations obſerved, by which it advanced from its firſt rudeneſs to its preſent elegance.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of uſing words properly, compriſes four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Proſody.

In this diviſion and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter diſtribution might not be found. Experience has long ſhewn this method to be ſo diſtinct as to obviate confuſion, and ſo comprehenſive as to prevent any inconvenient omiſſions. I likewiſe uſe the terms already received, and already underſtood, though perhaps others more proper might ſometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whoſe new terms have ſunk their learning into neglect, have left ſufficient warning againſt the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into ſyllables, and ſyllables into words. It therefore teaches previouſly the form and ſound of letters.

The letters of the Engliſh language are,

To theſe may be added certain combinations of letters univerſally uſed in printing; as ct, ſt, ſh, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, and &, or and per ſe, and. ct, ſt, ſh, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, &. 𝔠𝔱, ſ𝔱, ſ𝔥, ſ𝔩, 𝔣𝔣, ſſ, ſ𝔦, ſſ𝔦, 𝔣𝔦, 𝔣𝔣𝔦, ꝛ.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, becauſe anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expreſſed by the ſame character; but as thoſe letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly ſaid to conſiſt of twenty-ſix letters.

None of the ſmall conſonants have a double form, except ſ, s; of which ſ is uſed in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying: in the words ſays, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as ſyſtem, σύϛημα, ſympathy, συμπαθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowneſs.

The ſounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I ſhall not, like ſome other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of ſpeech, as a mechanick, anatomiſt, or phyſiologiſt; nor into the properties and gradation of ſounds, or the elegance or harſhneſs of particular combinations, as a writer of univerſal and tranſcendental grammar. I conſider the Engliſh alphabet only as it is Engliſh: and even in this narrow diſquiſition I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, becauſe by writing in Engliſh I ſuppoſe my reader already acquainted with the Engliſh language; and conſequently able to pronounce the letters, of which I teach the pronunciation; and becauſe of ſounds in general it may be obſerved, that words are unable to deſcribe them. An account therefore of the primitive and ſimple letters is uſeleſs almoſt alike to thoſe who know their ſound, and thoſe who know it not.

OF VOWELS.

A.

A has three ſounds, the ſlender, open, and broad.

A ſlender is found in moſt words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, ſalvation, generation.

The a ſlender is the proper Engliſh a, called very juſtly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e miſtum, as having a middle ſound between the open a and the e. The French have a ſimilar ſound in the word pais, and in their e maſculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly reſembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glaſs.

A broad reſembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written au, as fault, mault; and we ſtill ſay fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon ſound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruſtick pronunciation; as maun for man, haund for hand.

The ſhort a approaches to the a open, as graſs.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always ſlender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the ſound of the long and ſlender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the ſound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is ſometimes found in Latin words not compleatly naturaliſed or aſſimilated, but is no Engliſh diphthong; and is more properly expreſſed by ſingle e, as Ceſar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs moſt frequently in the Engliſh language.

E is long, as in ſcēne; or ſhort, as in cĕllar, ſĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

It is always ſhort before a double conſonant, or two conſonants, as in vĕx, pĕrplexity, rĕlent, mĕdlar, rĕptile, ſĕrpent, cĕllar, cĕſſation, blĕſſing, fĕll, fĕlling, dĕbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monoſyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being uſed to modify the foregoing conſonant, as ſince, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bāne; căn, cāne; pĭn, pīne; tŭn, tūne; rŏb, rōbe; pŏp, pōpe; fĭr, fīre; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tūbe.

Almoſt all words which now terminate in conſonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; wildneſs, wildneſſe; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and conſtituted a ſyllable with its aſſociate conſonant; for, in old editions, words are ſometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or ſilent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Remains calls it the ſilent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glŏve, lĭve, gĭve.

It has ſometimes in the end of words a ſound obſcure, and ſcarcely perceptible, as open, ſhapen, ſhotten, thiſtle, participle, lucre.

This faintneſs of ſound is found when e ſeparates a mute from a liquid, as in rotten; or follows a mute and liquid, as in cattle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, ſtew.

Ea ſounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is ſounded like e long, as ſeize, perceiving.

Eu ſounds as u long and ſoft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the ſound of u.

E may be ſaid to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, ſleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is ſounded as e ſhort; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a ſound, long, as fīne; and ſhort, as fĭn.

That is eminently obſervable in i, which may be likewiſe remarked in other letters, that the ſhort ſound is not the long ſound contracted, but a ſound wholly different.

The long ſound in monoſyllables is always marked by the e final, as thĭn, thīne.

I is often ſounded before r as a ſhort u; as flirt, firſt, ſhirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, ſhield, which is ſounded as the double ee; except friend, which is ſounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which tripthongs are ſounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, corrōding; or ſhort, as blŏck, knŏck, ŏblique, lŏll.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The ſhort o has ſometimes the ſound of a cloſe u, as ſon, come.

O coaleſces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the ſound of o long.

O is united to e in ſome words derived from Greek, as œconomy; but oe being not an Engliſh diphthong, they are better written as they are ſounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, ſoil, moil, noiſome.

This coalition of letters ſeems to unite the ſounds of the two letters as far as two ſounds can be united without being deſtroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the ſound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in ſome words has only the ſound of o long, as in ſoul, bowl, ſow, grow. Theſe different ſounds are uſed to diſtinguiſh different ſignifications; as bow, an inſtrument for ſhooting; bow, a depreſſion of the head: ſow, the ſhe of a boar; ſow, to ſcatter ſeed; bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden veſſel.

Ou is ſometimes pronounced like o ſoft, as court; ſometimes like o ſhort, as cough; ſometimes like u cloſe, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which uſe only can teach.

Ou is frequently uſed in the laſt ſyllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made Engliſh, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without conſidering that the laſt ſyllable gives the ſound neither of or nor ur, but a ſound between them, if not compounded of both; beſides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honeur, faveur.

U.

U is long in ūſe, confūſion; or ſhort, as ŭs, concŭſſion.

It coaleſces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in theſe combinations the force of the w, as quaff, queſt, quit, quite, languiſh; ſometimes in ui the i looſes its ſound, as in juice. It is ſometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, gueſt, guiſe, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no ſound.

Ue is ſometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, ſynagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian obſerves of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It ſupplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as deſtroy, deſtroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; ſay, ſayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ẏ, which was commonly uſed where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle ſyllable, before two conſonants, is commonly ſhort, as ŏppŏrtunity.

In monoſyllables a ſingle vowel before a ſingle conſonant is ſhort, as ſtag, frog.

Many is pronounced as if it were written manny.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried ſound, ſuch as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, ſubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is uſed before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the ſound of ſ; as ſincerely, centrick, century, circular, ciſtern, city, ſiccity: before a, o, and u, it ſounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curioſity, concupiſcence.

C might be omitted in the language without loſs, ſince one of its ſounds might be ſupplied by ſ, and the other by k, but that it preſerves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a ſound which is analyſed into tſh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the ſame ſound which the Italians give to the c ſimple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is ſounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymiſt, ſcheme, choler. Arch is commonly ſounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the Engliſh ſound of ch before a conſonant, as archbiſhop.

Ch, in ſome French words not yet aſſimilated, ſounds like ſh, as machine, chaiſe.

C, having no determinate ſound, according to Engliſh orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write ſtick, block, which were originally ſticke, blocke, in ſuch words. C is now mute.

It is uſed before l and r, as clock, croſs.

D.

D is uniform in its ſound, as death, diligent.

It is uſed before r, as draw, droſs; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the ſemi-vowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiouſly ſounded before a liquid, as flaſk, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable ſound, except that of is ſometimes ſpoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two ſounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other ſoft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, ſnug, ſong, frog.

Before e and i the ſound is uncertain.

G before e is ſoft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geeſe, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as ſinging, ſtronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnaſh, ſign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, to which may be added Egypt and gypſey.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the ſound of the hard g, as ghoſtly; in the middle, and ſometimes at the end, it is quite ſilent, as though, right, ſought, ſpoken tho', rite, ſoute.

It has often at the end the ſound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the ſame ſound in the middle; cough, trough, ſough, tough, enough, ſlough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a conſonant, deeply guttural, which is ſtill continued among the Scotch.

G is uſed before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aſpiration, and ſhows that the following vowel muſt be pronounced with a ſtrong emiſſion of the breath, as hat, horſe.

It ſeldom begins any but the firſt ſyllable, in which it is always ſounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hoſtler, honour, humble, honeſt, humour, and their derivatives.

It ſometimes begins middle or final ſyllables in words compounded, as blockhead; or derived from the Latin, as comprehended.

J.

J conſonant ſounds uniformly like the ſoft g, and is therefore a letter uſeleſs, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jeſter, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the ſound of hard c, and is uſed before e and i, where, according to Engliſh analogy, c would be ſoft, as kept, king, ſkirt, ſkeptick, for ſo it ſhould be written, not ſceptick, becauſe ſc is ſounded like ſ, as in ſcene.

It is uſed before n, as knell, knot, but totally loſes its ſound in modern pronunciation.

K is never doubled: but c is uſed before it to ſhorten the vowel by a double conſonant, as cŏckle, pĭckle.

L.

L has in Engliſh the ſame liquid ſound as in other languages.

The cuſtom is to double the l at the end of monoſyllables, as kill, will, full. Theſe words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e firſt grew ſilent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is ſometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, ſhould, pſalm, talk, ſalmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural ſounds, ſometimes aſpirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaꝼ, a loaf, or bread; hlaꝼoꞃð, a lord; but this pronunciation is now diſuſed.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almoſt mute, as table, ſhuttle.

M.

M has always the ſame ſound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has alwas the ſame ſound, as noble, manners.

N is ſometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the ſame ſound, which the Welſh and Germans confound with B.

P is ſometimes mute, as in pſalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is uſed for f in words derived from the Greek, as philoſopher, philanthrophy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a ſound which our Saxon anceſtors well expreſſed by cƿ, cw, as quadrant, queen, equeſtrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is ſometimes ſounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, riſque, chequer.

R.

R has the ſame rough ſnarling ſound as in other tongues.

The Saxons uſed often to put h before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is uſed in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of ſome words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, ſepulchre.

S.

S has a hiſſing ſound, as ſibilation, ſiſter.

A ſingle s ſeldom ends any word, except the third perſon of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, buſhes, diſtreſſes; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, ſurplus; the cloſe being always either in ſe, as houſe, horſe, or in ſs, as graſs, dreſs, bliſs, leſs, anciently graſſe, dreſſe.

S ſingle, at the end of words, has a groſſer ſound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, ſurplus.

It ſounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intruſion; and like ſ, if it follows a conſonant, as converſion.

It ſounds like z before e mute, as refuſe, and before y final, as roſy; and in thoſe words, boſom, deſire, wiſdom, priſon, priſoner, preſent, preſent, damſel, caſement.

It is the peculiar quality of ſ, that it may be ſounded before all conſonants, except x and z, in which ſ is compriſed, x being only ks, and z a hard or groſs ſ. This ſ is therefore termed by grammarians ſuæ poteſtatis litera; the reaſon of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be, that in ſome words it might be doubled at pleaſure. Thus we find in ſeveral languages:

Σβέννυμι, ſcatter, ſdegno, ſdrucciolo, ſfavellare, σφίγξ, ſgombrare, ſgranare, ſhake, ſlumber, ſmell, ſnipe, ſpace, ſplendour, ſpring, ſqueeze, ſhrew, ſtep, ſtrength, ſtramen, ſtripe, ſventura, ſwell.

T has its cuſtomary ſound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the ſound of ſi, as ſalvation, except an ſ goes before, as queſtion, excepting likewiſe derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two ſounds; the one ſoft, as thus, weather; the other hard, as thing, think. The ſound is ſoft in theſe words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds; and in that, thoſe, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, theſe, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is ſoftened at the end of a word, an e ſilent muſt be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a ſound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Iſlandick alphabet, v is only diſtinguiſhed by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, ſome grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a conſonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be reſolved into ouater; but letters of the ſame ſound are always reckoned conſonants in other alphabets: and it may be obſerved, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as froſty winter.

Wh has a ſound accounted peculiar to the Engliſh, which the Saxons better expreſſed by hƿ, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and ſometimes in wholeſome, wh is ſounded like a ſimple h.

X.

X begins no Engliſh word; it has the ſound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a conſonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a conſonant, ye, young. It is thought by ſome to be in all caſes a vowel. But it may be obſerved of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as roſy youth.

The chief argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the ſounds which they are ſuppoſed to have as conſonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like that of all other conſonants; thus we ſay, tu, ut; do odd; but in wed, dew, the two ſounds of w have no reſemblance of each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally Engliſh; it has the ſound, as its name izzard or ſ hard expreſſes, of an ſ uttered with cloſer compreſſion of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have ſuppoſed orthoepy, or juſt utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expreſſing certain ſounds by proper characters. I have therefore obſerved in what words any of the letters are mute.

Moſt of the writers of Engliſh grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwiſe than they are written, and ſeem not ſufficiently to have conſidered, that of Engliſh, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curſory and colloquial, the other regular and ſolemn. The curſory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unſkilfulneſs, or affectation. The ſolemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always leſs remote from the orthography, and leſs liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the curſory ſpeech of thoſe with whom they happened to converſe; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often eſtabliſhed the jargon of the loweſt of the people as the model of ſpeech.

For pronunciation the beſt general rule is, to conſider thoſe as the moſt elegant ſpeakers who deviate leaſt from the written words.

There have been many ſchemes offered for the emendation and ſettlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earlieſt writers in rude ages, was at firſt very various and uncertain, and is yet ſufficiently irregular. Of theſe reformers ſome have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without conſidering that this is to meaſure by a ſhadow, to take that for a model or ſtandard which is changing while they apply it. Others, leſs abſurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of ſucceſs, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of ſounds, that every ſound may have its own character, and every character a ſingle ſound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a ſynod of grammarians upon principles of ſcience. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books uſeleſs? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confuſion and perplexity of ſuch an alteration?

Some of theſe ſchemes I ſhall however exhibit, which may be uſed according to the diverſities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the firſt who propoſed a ſcheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, ſecretary of ſtate to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practiſed in grammatical diſquiſitions. Had he written the following lines according to his ſcheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Eraſmus that great injur'd name,
The glory of the prieſthood, and the ſhame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove thoſe holy Vandals off the ſtage.

At lengð Eraſmus, ðat grët ïnʒurd nâm,
Δe glorï of ðe prëſthűd, and ðe zâm,
Stemmd ðe *w*ild torrent of a barb'rous âʒ,
And dröv ðös höli Vandals öff ðe ſtâʒ.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated maſter of St. Paul's ſchool in London; which I cannot repreſent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in uſe, ſo as to make it underſtood, exhibiting two ſtanzas of Spenſer in the reformed orthography.

Spenſer, book iii. canto 5.
Unthankful wretch, ſaid he, is this the meed,
With which her ſovereign mercy thou doſt quite?
Thy life ſhe ſaved by her gracious deed;
But thou doſt ween with villanous deſpight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than ſo diſloyally,
Deem of her high deſert, or ſeem ſo light.
Fair death it is to ſhun more ſhame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love diſloyally.
But if to love diſloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be ſuch reproach from me.
What can I leſs do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot reſtore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her ſerve,
Dying her ſerve, and living her adore.
Thy life ſhe gave, thy life ſhe doth deſerve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her ſervice ſwerve.

Vnħankful wrɛɔ, ſ*a*id hj, iz ðis ðe mjd,

Ðj ljf ꞅj ſ*a*ʋɛd bj hɛr graſius djd;
But ðou duſt wen wiħ ʋil*ɛ*nus diſpjt,

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an underſtanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He ſeems to have been more ſanguine than his predeceſſors, for he printed his book according to his own ſcheme; which the following ſpecimen will make eaſily underſtood:

But whenſoever you have ocaſion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to ſtand upon your guard, than to truſt to their gentleneſs. For the ſafeguard of your face, which they have moſt mind unto, provide a purſehood, made of coarſe boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more ſafety is to be lined againſt the eminent parts with woollen cloth. Firſt cut a piece about an inch and an half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being ſowed in his place, join unto it two ſhort pieces of the ſame breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then ſet an other piece about the breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of the noſe. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece, half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may ſerve though it be in the heat of the day.

Bet ƿenſoëver you hav' occaſion to trubble ðeir patienc', or to c*oo*m among ðem b*ee*ing trubled, it is better to ſtand upon your gard, ðan to truſt to ðeir gentlenes. For ðe ſaf' gard of your fac', ƿiɔ ðey hav' moſt mind' unto, provid' a purſeh*oo*d, mad' of c*oo*rſe boultering, to bee drawn and knit about your collar, ƿiɔ for mor' ſaf'ty is to b*ee* lined againſt ð' eminent parts wiŧ w*oo*len cloŧ. Firſt cut a p*ee*c' about an inɔ and an half broad, and half a yard long, to reaɔ round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer; ƿiɔ b*ee*ing ſowed in his plac', join unto it two ꞅort p*ee*ces of the ſam breadŧ under ðe eys, for the bals of ðe ch*ee*ks, and then ſet an oðer p*ee*c' about ðe breadŧ of a ꞅilling againſt the top of ðe noſe. At oðer tim's, ƿen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may ſerve ðowʒ it be in the heat of ðe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in ſuch editions of the works of Milton as were publiſhed by himſelf. Of theſe reformers every man had his own ſcheme; but they agreed in one general deſign of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting ſuch as they thought ſuperfluous. Some of them would have written theſe lines thus:

———All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Biſhop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philoſophical language, propoſed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yʋr Fádher hʋitſh art in héven, h*a*lloed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdy̋m cy̋m, dhy ʋill bi dy̋n in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have ſince had no general reformers; but ſome ingenious men have endeavoured to deſerve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the preter-tenſe, ſais for ſays, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of theſe it may be ſaid, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both becauſe they have innovated little, and becauſe few have followed them.

The Engliſh language has properly no dialects; the ſtyle of writers has no profeſſed diverſity in the uſe of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of ſkill or care. The oral diction is uniform in no ſpacious country, but has leſs variation in England than in moſt other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of uſe, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonick race, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now ſeems harſh and rough, but was probably uſed by our anceſtors. The northern ſpeech is therefore not barbarous but obſolete. The ſpeech in the weſtern provinces ſeems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would expreſs.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the ſenſe of the ſame word is diverſified; as horſe, horſes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The Engliſh have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite ſignification, and means one, with ſome reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a ſword, that is, ſome ſword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of thoſe that are men than one of thoſe that are boys. An army might enter without reſiſtance, that is, any army.

In the ſenſes in which we uſe a or an in the ſingular, we ſpeak in the plural without an article; as, theſe are good books.

I have made an the original article, becauſe it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new uſe, as the German ein, and the French un; the n being cut off before a conſonant in the ſpeed of utterance.

Grammarians of the laſt age direct, that an ſhould be uſed before h; whence it appears that the Engliſh anciently aſpirated leſs. An is ſtill uſed before the ſilent h, as an herb, an honeſt man: but otherwiſe a; as,

A horſe, a horſe, my kingdom for a horſe.
Shakeſpeare.

An or a can only be joined with a ſingular, the correſpondent plural is the noun without an article, as I want a pen, I want pens: or with the pronominal adjective ſome, as I want ſome pens.

THE has a particular and definite ſignification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the uſe of man; that is, for thoſe beings that are cattle, and his uſe that is man.

The is uſed in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature firſt made man,
Ere the baſe laws of ſervitude began,
When wild in woods the noble ſavage ran. Dryd.

Many words are uſed without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Ariſtarchus, Jeruſalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is uſed as a proper name.

2. Abſtract names, as blackneſs, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugлineſs, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindneſs.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not braſs, but ſteel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of Engliſh nouns to words going before or following are not expreſſed by caſes, or changes of termination, but as in moſt of the other European languages by prepoſitions, unleſs we may be ſaid to have a genitive caſe.

Singular.

Nom.	Magiſter,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Gen.	Magiſtri,	of a Maſter, of the Maſter, or Maſters, the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtro,	to a Maſter, to the Maſter.
Acc.	Magiſtrum,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Voc.	Magiſter,	Maſter, O Maſter.
Abl.	Magiſtro,	from a Maſter, from the Maſter.

Plural.

Nom.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Gen.	Magiſtrorum,	of Maſters, of the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtris,	to Maſters, to the Maſters.
Acc.	Magiſtros,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Voc.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, O Maſters.
Abl.	Magiſtris,	from Maſters, from the Maſters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Maſter	Gen. Maſters.	Plur. Maſters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

Theſe genitives are always written with a mark of eliſion, maſter's, ſcholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the ſoldier's valour, for the ſoldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, becauſe 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's paſſions; the rabble's inſolence; the multitude's folly; in all theſe caſes it is apparent that his cannot be underſtood. We ſay likewiſe, the foundation's ſtrength, the diamond's luſtre, the winter's ſeverity; but in theſe caſes his may be underſtood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now ſupplied by it and its.

The learned and ſagacious Wallis, to whom every Engliſh grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective poſſeſſive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the ſame to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ oris, or any other Latin genitive. Dr. Lowth, on the other part, ſuppoſes the poſſeſſive pronouns mine and thine to be genitive caſes.

This termination of the noun ſeems to conſtitute a real genitive indicating poſſeſſion. It is derived to us from thoſe who declined ꞅmið, a ſmith; Gen. ꞅmiðeꞃ, of a ſmith; Plur. ꞅmiðeꞃ, or ꞅmiðaꞃ, ſmiths; and ſo in two other of their ſeven declenſions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a ſyllable than the original word; knitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenſer.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the ſame with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; ſiſter, ſiſters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwiſe be ſounded, as after ch, s, ſh, x, z; after c ſounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive ſingular is the ſame.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, ſwine, and more anciently eyen and ſhoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, miſchief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louſe, mice from mouſe, geeſe from gooſe, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have for the moſt part no genitives; but we ſay, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits againſt the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords houſe may be ſaid for the houſe of Lords; but ſuch phraſes are not now in uſe; and ſurely an Engliſh ear rebels againſt them. They would commonly produce a troubleſome ambiguity, as the Lord's houſe may be the houſe of Lords, or the houſe of a Lord. Beſides that the mark of eliſion is improper, for in the Lords' houſe nothing is cut off.

Some Engliſh ſubſtantives, like thoſe of many other languages, change their termination as they expreſs different ſexes, as prince, princeſs; actor, actreſs; lion, lioneſs; hero, heroines. To theſe mentioned by Dr. Lowth may be added arbitreſs, poeteſs, chauntreſs, ducheſs, tigreſs, governeſs, tutreſs, peereſs, authoreſs, traytreſs, and perhaps others. Of theſe variable terminations we have only a ſufficient number to make us feel our want, for when we ſay of a woman that ſhe is a philoſopher, an aſtronomer, a builder, a weaver, a dancer, we perceive an impropriety in the termination which we cannot avoid; but we can ſay that ſhe is an architect, a botaniſt, a ſtudent, becauſe theſe terminations have not annexed to them the notion of ſex. In words which the neceſſities of life are often requiring, the ſex is diſtinguiſhed not by different terminations but by different names, as a bull, a cow; a horſe, a mare; equus, equa; a cock, a hen; and ſometimes by pronouns prefixed, as a he-goat, a ſhe-goat.

Of ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the Engliſh language are wholly indeclinable; having neither caſe, gender, nor number, and being added to ſubſtantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Compariſon of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the ſuperlative by adding eſt, to the poſitive; as fair, fairer, faireſt; lovely, lovelier, lovelieſt; ſweet, ſweeter, ſweeteſt; low, lower, loweſt; high, higher, higheſt.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, beſt; bad, worſe, worſt; little, leſs, leaſt; near, nearer, next; much, more, moſt; many (or moe), more (for moer), moſt (for moeſt); late, latter, lateſt, or laſt.

Some comparatives form a ſuperlative by adding moſt, as nether, nethermoſt; outer, outmoſt; under, undermoſt; up, upper, uppermoſt; fore, former, foremoſt.

Moſt is ſometimes added to a ſubſtantive, as topmoſt, ſouthmoſt.

Many adjectives do not admit of compariſon by terminations, and are only compared by more and moſt, as benevolent, more benevolent, moſt benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and moſt, even when they have comparatives and ſuperlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; faireſt, or moſt fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular compariſon, the comparative more is oftener uſed than the ſuperlative moſt, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than moſt fair for faireſt.

The compariſon of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiouſneſs of utterance, or agreeableneſs of ſound, is not eaſily reduced to rules.

Monoſyllables are commonly compared.

Polyſyllables, or words of more than two ſyllables, are ſeldom compared otherwiſe than by more and moſt, as deplorable, more deplorable, moſt deplorable.

Diſſyllables are ſeldom compared if they terminate in ſome, as fulſome, toilſome; in ful, as careful, ſpleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in leſs, as careleſs, harmleſs; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as miſſive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as ſkinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and ſuperlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language ſubjected ſo little and ſo lately to grammar, ſuch anomalies muſt frequently occur.

So ſhady is compared by Milton.

> She in ſhadieſt covert hid,
> Tun'd her nocturnal note. Parad. Loſt.

And virtuous.

> What ſhe wills to ſay or do,
> Seems wiſeſt, virtuouſeſt, diſcreeteſt, beſt.
> Parad. Loſt.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not ſo decorous, in reſpect of God, that he ſhould immediately do all the meaneſt and triflingeſt things himſelf, without making uſe of any inferior or ſubordinate miniſter. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

> I ſhall be named among the famouſeſt
> Of women, ſung at ſolemn feſtivals. Milton's Agoniſt.

Inventive, by Aſcham.

Thoſe have the inventiveſt heads for all purpoſes, and roundeſt tongues in all matters. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortaleſt poiſons practiſed by the Weſt Indians, have ſome mixture of the blood, fat, or fleſh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the propereſt and naturaleſt conſiderations that belong to this piece.

Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Johnſon.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; ſuch as preſuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underſtand not things.

Ben. Johnſon.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have ſuſtain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath pow'rfulleſt to ſend
Againſt us from about his throne. Parad. Loſt.

The termination in iſh may be accounted in ſome ſort a degree of compariſon, by which the ſignification is diminiſhed below the poſitive, as black, blackiſh, or tending to blackneſs; ſalt, ſaltiſh, or having a little taſte of ſalt: they therefore admit no compariſon. This termination is ſeldom added but to words expreſſing ſenſible qualities, nor often to words of above one ſyllable, and is ſcarcely uſed in the ſolemn or ſublime ſtyle.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns in the Engliſh language are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the ſame, ſome.

The pronouns perſonal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accuſ. and other oblique caſes.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly uſed in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the ſecond perſon plural is uſed for the ſecond perſon ſingular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to maſculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to uſe he, and for its, his.

The poſſeſſive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without caſes or change of termination.

The poſſeſſive of the firſt perſon is my, mine, our, ours; of the ſecond, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from he, his, from ſhe, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both ſexes.

Our, yours, hers, theirs, are uſed when the ſubſtantive preceding is ſeparated by a verb, as Theſe are our books. Theſe books are ours. Your children excel ours in ſtature, but ours ſurpaſs yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithſtanding their ſeeming plural termination, are applied equally to ſingular and plural ſubſtantives, as This book is ours. Theſe books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly uſed before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now diſuſed in proſe, might be ſtill properly continued in poetry; they are uſed ours and yours, and are referred to a ſubſtantive, preceding, as, thy houſe is larger than mine, but my garden is more ſpacious than thine.

Their and theirs are the poſſeſſives likewiſe of they, when they is the plural of it, and therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever.

	Sing. and Plur.		Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Who	Nom.	Which
Gen.	Whoſe	Gen.	Of which, or whoſe
Other oblique caſes.	Whom	Other oblique caſes.	Which

Who is now uſed in relation to perſons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At leaſt it was common to ſay, the man which, though I remember no example of, the thing who.

Whoſe is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only uſed in the nominative and accuſative caſes; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as, Whether of theſe is left I know not. Whether ſhall I chooſe? It is now almoſt obſolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whoſoever, whatſoever, being compounded of who or what, and ſoever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all caſes,	This	Theſe
	That	Thoſe
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not uſed but when it is referred to a ſubſtantive preceding, as I have ſent other horſes. I have not ſent the ſame horſes, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal uſe. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which ſignify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly, there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in uſe. The reſt ſeem to be paſſing by degrees into neglect, though proper, uſeful, and analogous. They are referred both to ſingular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words uſed only in conjunction with pronouns, own and ſelf.

Own is added to poſſeſſives, both ſingular and plural, as my own hand, our own houſe. It is emphatical, and implies a ſilent contrariety or oppoſition; as, I live in my own houſe, that is, not in a hired houſe. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to poſſeſſives, as myſelf, yourſelves; and ſometimes to perſonal pronouns, as himſelf, itſelf, themſelves. It then, like own, expreſſes emphaſis and oppoſition, as I did this myſelf, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourſelves by vain rage.

Himſelf, itſelf, themſelves, is ſuppoſed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his ſelf, it' ſelf, their ſelves; ſo that ſelf is always a ſubſtantive. This ſeems juſtly obſerved, for we ſay, He came himſelf; Himſelf ſhall do this; where himſelf cannot be an accuſative.

Of the VERB.

Engliſh verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languiſh. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Moſt verbs ſignifying action may likewiſe ſignify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love; I ſtrike, I am now ſtriking.

Verbs have only two tenſes inflected in their terminations, the preſent, and ſimple preterite; the other tenſes are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, ſhall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The paſſive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the ſubſtantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Preſent Tenſe.

Sing. I have; thou haſt; he hath or has;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently uſed both in verſe and proſe.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had; thou hadſt; he had;
Plur. We had; ye had; they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had; thou hadſt had; he has or hath had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had; thou hadſt had; he had had;
Plur. We had had; ye had had; they had had.

Future.

Sing. I ſhall have; thou ſhalt have; he ſhall have;
Plur. We ſhall have; ye ſhall have; they ſhall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have; thou wilt have; he will have;
Plur. We will have; ye will have; they will have.

By reading theſe future tenſes may be obſerved the variations of ſhall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have, or have thou; let him have;
Plur. Let us have; have, or have ye; let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Preſent.

Sing. I have; thou have; he have;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Preterite ſimple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had; thou have had; he have had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Future.

Sing. I ſhall have; as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I ſhall have had; thou ſhalt have had; he ſhall have had;
Plur. We ſhall have had; ye ſhall have had; they ſhall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of ſpeaking is expreſſed by may, can, in the preſent; and might, could, or ſhould, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Preſent.

Sing. I may have; thou mayſt have; he may have;
Plur. We may have; ye may have; they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have; thou mightſt have; he might have.
Plur. We might have; ye might have; they might have.

Preſent.

Sing. I can have; thou canſt have; he can have;
Plur. We can have; ye can have; they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have; thou couldſt have; he could have;
Plur. We could have; ye could have; they could have.

In like manner ſhould is united to the verb.

There is likewiſe a double Preterite.

Sing. I ſhould have had; thou ſhouldſt have had; he ſhould have had.
Plur. We ſhould have had; ye ſhould have had; they ſhould have had.

In like manner we uſe, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Preſent. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle preſent. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To Love.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I love; thou loveſt; he loveth, or loves;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.

Preterite ſimple.

Sing. I loved; thou lovedſt; he loved;
Plur. We loved; ye loved; they loved;
Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love, or love thou; let him love;
Plur. Let us love; love, or love ye; let them love.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I love; thou love; he love;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.
Preterite ſimple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c.
Second Future. I ſhall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Preſent. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or ſhould love, &c.
Double Pret. I might, could, or ſhould have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle preſent. Loving. Participle paſt. Loved.

The paſſive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenſes of the verb to be, which muſt therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I am; thou art; he is;
Plur. We are, or be; ye are, or be; they are, or be.

The plural be is now little in uſe.

Preterite.

Sing. I was; thou waſt or wert; he was;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be uſed in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I be; thou beeſt; he be;
Plur. We be; ye be; they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were; thou wert; he were;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I ſhall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or ſhould be; could, would, or ſhould have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To be. Preterite. To have been.
Participle preſ. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Paſſive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I ſhall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of Engliſh verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflexions, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I do; thou doſt; he doth;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did; thou didſt; he did;
Plur. We did; ye did; they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou; let him do;
Plur. Let us do; do ye; let them do.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I do; thou do; he do;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

The reſt are as in the indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle preſ. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

Do is ſometimes uſed ſuperfluouſly, as, I do love, I did love; ſimply for I love, or I loved; but this is conſidered as a vicious mode of ſpeech.

It is ſometimes uſed emphatically; as,

> I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
> Chaos is come again. Shakeſpeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wiſhed him ſucceſs, but did not help him. This, by cuſtom at leaſt, appears more eaſy, than the other form of expreſſing the ſame ſenſe by a negative adverb after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The Imperative prohibitory is ſeldom applied in the ſecond perſon, at leaſt in proſe, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praiſe beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief uſe is in interrogative forms of ſpeech, in which it is uſed through all the perſons; as, Do I live? Doſt thou ſtrike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didſt thou love her? Did ſhe die? So likewiſe in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did ſhe not die?

Do and did are thus uſed only for the preſent and ſimple preterite.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is uſed, may not improperly denominate them neuter paſſives, as they are inflected according to the paſſive form by the help of the verb ſubſtantive to be. They anſwer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

I am riſen, ſurrexi, Latin; Je me ſuis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m'etois promené.

In like manner we commonly expreſs the preſent tenſe; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempeſt is raging, furit procella. I am purſuing an enemy, hoſtem inſequor. So the other tenſes, as, We were walking, ἐτυγχάνομεν περιπατοῦντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, I ſhall or will be walking.

There is another manner of uſing the active participle, which gives it a paſſive ſignification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The braſs is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expreſſion, probably corrupted from a phraſe more pure, but now ſomewhat obſolete: The book is a printing, The braſs is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nowns ſignifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when ſome convenience of verſification does not invite its revival. It is uſed among the purer writers of former times after if, though, ere, before, till or until, whether, except, unleſs, whatſoever, whomſoever, and words of wiſhing; as, Doubtleſs thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Iſrael acknowledge us not.

Of IRREGULAR VERBS.

The Engliſh verbs were divided by Ben Johnſon into four conjugations, without any reaſon ariſing from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, ſuch as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be conſidered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monoſyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almoſt all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are obſerved by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the ſcantineſs of our conjugations, there is ſcarcely any other place for irregularity.

The firſt irregularity, is a ſlight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the laſt ſyllable ed is often joined with the former by ſuppreſſion of e; as, lov'd for loved; after c, ch, ſh, f, k, x, and after the conſonants ſ, th, when more ſtrongly pronounced, and ſometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a ſhort vowel, t is uſed in pronunciation, but very ſeldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, ſnatch't, fiſh't, wak't, dwel't, ſmel't; for plac'd, ſnatch'd, fiſh'd, wak'd, dwel'd, ſmel'd; or placed, ſnatched, fiſhed, waked, dwelled, ſmelled.

Thoſe words which terminate in l, or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in ſolemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt; ſometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as, vext: this is not conſtant.

A long vowel is often changed into a ſhort one; thus, kept, ſlept, wept crept, ſwept; from the verbs, to keep, to ſleep, to weep, to creep, to ſweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coaleſce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coaleſce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more eaſily pronounced: as, read, led, ſpread, ſhed, ſhred, bid, hid, chid, fed, bled, bred, ſped, ſtrid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to ſpred, to ſhed, to ſhread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to ſpeed, to ſtride, to ſlide, to ride. And thus, caſt, hurt, coſt, burſt, eat, beat, ſweat, ſit, quit, ſmit, writ, bit, hit, met, ſhot; from the verbs, to caſt, to hurt, to coſt, to burſt, to eat, to beat, to ſweat, to ſit, to quit, to ſmite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to ſhoot. And in like manner, lent, ſent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to ſend, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or paſſive is often formed in en, inſtead of ed; as been, taken, given, ſlain, known, from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to ſlay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, bidden, chidden, ſhotten, choſen, broken; but likewiſe writ, bit, eat, beat, bid, chid, ſhot, choſe, broke, are promiſcuouſly uſed in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to bide, to chide, to ſhoot, to chooſe, to break, and many ſuch like.

In the ſame manner ſown, ſhewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as ſow'd, ſhew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to ſow, to ſhew, to hew, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning theſe double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he ſhall ſeldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle diſtinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that diſtinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote. Wrote however may be uſed in poetry; at leaſt if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themſelves perhaps intitled to trample on grammarians.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, ſpin, begin, ſwim, ſtrike, ſtick, ſing, ſting, fling, ring, wring, ſpring, ſwing, drink, ſink, ſhrink, ſtink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle paſſive, give won, ſpun, begun, ſwum, ſtruck, ſtuck, ſung, ſtung, flung, rung, wrung, ſprung, ſwung, drunk, ſunk, ſhrunk, ſtung, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And moſt of them are alſo formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, ſang, ſprang, drank, came, ran, and ſome others; but moſt of theſe are now obſolete. Some in the participle paſſive likewiſe take en, as ſtricken, ſtrucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, ſeek, beſeech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, ſought, beſought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of theſe retain likewiſe the regular form, as teached, reached, beſeeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, ſhake, forſake, wake, awake, ſtand, break, ſpeak, bear, ſhear, ſwear, tear, weave, cleave, ſtrive, thrive, drive, ſhine, riſe, ariſe, ſmite, write, bide, abide, ride, chooſe, chuſe, tread, get, beget, forget, ſeethe, make in both preterite and participle took, forſook, woke, awoke, ſtood, broke, ſpoke, bore, ſhore, ſwore, tore, wore, wove, clove, ſtrove, throve, drove, ſhone, roſe, aroſe, ſmote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, choſe, trode, got, begot, forgot, ſod. But we ſay likewiſe, thrive, riſe, ſmit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite ſome are likewiſe formed by a, as brake, ſpake, bare, ſhare, ſware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps ſome others, but more rarely. In the participle paſſive are many of them formed by en; as taken, ſhaken, forſaken, broken, ſpoken, born, ſhorn, ſworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, riſen, ſmitten, ridden, choſen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, ſodden. And many do likewiſe retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, ſheared, weaved, leaved, abided, ſeethed.

4. Give, bid, ſit, make in the preterite gave, bade, ſate; in the participle paſſive, given, bidden, ſitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, ſlay, ſee, lie, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew. ſlew, ſaw, lay; their participles paſſive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown, ſlain, ſeen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, the participle is gone.

Of DERIVATION.

That the Engliſh language may be more eaſily underſtood, it is neceſſary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I ſhall ſometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and ſometimes endeavour to ſupply his defects, and rectify his errours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the preſent of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to ſtrike, I ſtrick or ſtrook, a ſtroke.

The action is the ſame with the participle preſent, as loving, frighting, fighting, ſtriking.

The agent, or perſon acting, is denoted by the ſyllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, ſtriker.

Subſtantives, adjectives, and ſometimes other parts of ſpeech, are changed into verbs: in which caſe the vowel is often lengthened, or the conſonant ſoftened: as, a houſe, to houſe; braſs, to braze; glaſs, to glaze; graſs, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fiſh, to fiſh; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, eſpecially to adjectives; as, haſte, to haſten; length, to lengthen; ſtrength, to ſtrengthen; ſhort, to ſhorten; faſt, to faſten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; ſoft, to ſoften.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louſe, louſy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; luſt, luſty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; uſe, uſeful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almoſt the ſame ſenſe, but with ſome kind of diminution thereof, the termination ſome is added, denoting ſomething, or in ſome degree; as, delight, delightſome; game, gameſome; irk, irkſome; burden, burdenſome; trouble, troubleſome; light, lightſome; hand, handſome; alone, loneſome; toil, toilſome.

On the contrary, the termination leſs added to ſubſtantives, makes adjectives ſignifying want; as, worthleſs, witleſs, heartleſs, joyleſs, careleſs, helpleſs. Thus comfort, comfortleſs; ſap, ſapleſs.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleaſant, unpleaſant; wiſe, unwiſe; profitable, unprofitable; patient; impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuſeful, and many more.

The original Engliſh privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its deſcendants, words already ſignifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indiſcreet, the inſeparable particles un and in have fallen into confuſion, from which it is not eaſy to diſentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally Engliſh, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandſome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unaſſiſting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle preſent, to mark a forbearance of action, as unſighing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to moſt ſubſtantives which have an Engliſh termination, as unfertileneſs, unperfectneſs, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; uncivil, incivility; unactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is uſual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepoſitive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes, of the French, ſignify almoſt the ſame as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, ſince it anſwers to the Latin prepoſition de. Mis inſinuates ſome errour, and for the moſt part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to diſlike; honour, diſhonour; to honour, to grace, to diſhonour, to diſgrace; to deign, to diſdeign; chance, hap, miſchance, miſhap; to take, to miſtake; deed, miſdeed; to uſe, to miſuſe; to employ, to miſemploy; to apply, to miſapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the ſame ſignification, as diſtinguiſh, diſtinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to ſubſtantives, and ſometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import ſome kind of ſimilitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The ſame termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like ſignification; as, beautiful, beautifully; ſweet, ſweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with ſome degree of ſweetneſs.

The termination iſh added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to ſubſtantives, imports ſimilitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greeniſh; white, whitiſh; ſoft, ſoftiſh; a thief, thieviſh; a wolf, wolviſh; a child, childiſh.

We have forms of diminutives in ſubſtantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, a pickrel; this is a French termination: a gooſe, a goſling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawkins; Wilkin, Tomkin, and others.

Yet ſtill there is another form of diminution among the Engliſh, by leſſening the ſound itſelf, eſpecially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that ſometimes not ſo much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, ſup, ſip, ſoop, ſop, ſippet, where, beſides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; ſpit, ſpout; babe, baby, booby, βοῦπαις; great pronounced long, eſpecially if with a ſtronger ſound, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a ſucceſſion of ſmaller and then greater ſounds; and ſo in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore ſcarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abſtract ſubſtantives, by adding the termination neſs, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as, white, whiteneſs; hard, hardneſs; great, greatneſs; ſkilful, ſkilfulneſs; unſkilfulneſs; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, prieſthood, likelihood, falſehood.

There are other abſtracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a ſmall change being ſometimes made; as, long, length; ſtrong, ſtrength; broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; ſlow, ſlowth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, droughth; young, youth; and ſo moon, month.

Like theſe are ſome words derived from verbs; die, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly ſpoken and written later math, after math; ſteal, ſtealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

Theſe ſhould rather be written flighth, frighth, only that cuſtom will not ſuffer h to be twice repeated.

The ſame form retain faith, ſpight, wreathe, wrath, broth, froth, breath, ſooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whoſe primitives are either entirely obſolete, or ſeldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fey or foy, ſpry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, ſay, work.

Some ending in ſhip imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingſhip, wardſhip, guardianſhip, partnerſhip, ſtewardſhip, beadſhip, lordſhip.

Thus worſhip, that is worthſhip; whence worſhipful, and to worſhip.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do eſpecially denote dominion, at leaſt ſtate or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, chriſtendom, freedom, wiſdom, whoredom, biſhoprick, bailywick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the ſame import with us as among them, ſcarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, uſage.

There are in Engliſh often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, batoon, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous compoſition for food, made by beating different bodies into one maſs. All theſe are of ſimilar ſignification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twiſt, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more ſubtlety than ſolidity, and ſuch as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn uſually imply the noſe, and what relates to it. From the Latin naſus are derived the French nes and the Engliſh noſe; and neſſe, a promontory, as projecting like a noſe. But as if from the conſonants ns taken from naſus, and tranſpoſed, that they may the better correſpond, ſn denotes naſus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the noſe, as ſnout, ſneeze, ſnore, ſnort, ſnear, ſnicker, ſnot, ſnevil, ſnite, ſnuff, ſnuffle, ſnaffle, ſnarle, ſnudge.

There is another ſn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin ſinuo, as ſnake, ſneak, ſnail, ſnare; ſo likewiſe ſnap and ſnatch, ſnib, ſnub.

Bl imply a blaſt; as blow, blaſt, to blaſt, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blaſt one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluſter, blurt, bliſter, blab, bladder, bleb, bliſter, blabber-lip't, blubber-cheek't, bloted, blote-herrings, blaſt, blaze, to blow, that is, bloſſom, bloom; and perhaps blood and bluſh.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing ſignified; and therefore the ſounds of letters ſmaller, ſharper, louder, cloſer, ſofter, ſtronger, clearer, more obſcure, and more ſtridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the thing ſignified.

Thus words that begin with ſtr intimate the force and effect of the thing ſignified, as if probably derived from ϛϱόννυμι, or ſtrenuus; as ſtrong, ſtrength, ſtrew, ſtrike, ſtreake, ſtroke, ſtripe, ſtrive, ſtrife, ſtruggle, ſtrout, ſtrut, ſtretch, ſtrait, ſtrit, ſtrict, ſtreight, that is, narrow, diſtrain, ſtreſs, diſtreſs, ſtring, ſtrap, ſtream, ſtreamer, ſtrand, ſtrip, ſtray, ſtruggle, ſtrange, ſtride, ſtraddle.

St in like manner imply ſtrength, but in a leſs degree, ſo much only as is ſufficient to preſerve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin ſto: for example, ſtand, ſtay, that is, to remain, or to prop; ſtaff, ſtay, that is, to oppoſe; ſtop, to ſtuff, ſtifle, to ſtay, that is, to ſtop; a ſtay, that is, an obſtacle; ſtick, ſtut, ſtutter, ſtammer, ſtagger, ſtickle, ſtick, ſtake, a ſharp pale, and any thing depoſited at play; ſtock, ſtem, ſting, to ſting, ſtink, ſtitch, ſtud, ſtanchion, ſtub, ſtubble, to ſtub up, ſtump, whence ſtumble, ſtalk, to ſtalk, ſtep, to ſtamp with the feet, whence to ſtamp, that is, to make an impreſſion and a ſtamp; ſtow, to ſtow, to beſtow, ſteward or ſtoward, ſtead, ſteady, ſteadfaſt, ſtable, a ſtable, a ſtall, to ſtall, ſtool, ſtall, ſtill, ſtall, ſtallage, ſtall, ſtage, ſtill, adj. and ſtill, adv. ſtale, ſtout, ſturdy, ſteed, ſtoat, ſtallion, ſtiff, ſtark-dead, to ſtarve with hunger or cold; ſtone, ſteel, ſtern, ſtanch, to ſtanch blood, to ſtare, ſteep, ſteeple, ſtair, ſtandard, a ſtated meaſure, ſtately. In all theſe, and perhaps ſome others, ſt denote ſomething firm and fixed.

Thr imply a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thruſt, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply ſome ſort of obliquity or diſtortion, as wry, to wreathe, wreſt, wreſtle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wriſt, wrap.

Sw imply a ſilent agitation, or a ſofter kind of lateral motion; as ſway, ſwag, to ſway, ſwagger, ſwerve, ſweat, ſweep, ſwill, ſwim, ſwing, ſwift, ſweet, ſwitch, ſwinge.

Nor is there much difference of ſm in ſmoothe, ſmug, ſmile, ſmirk, ſmite, which ſignifies the ſame as to ſtrike, but is a ſofter word; ſmall, ſmell, ſmack, ſmother, ſmart, a ſmart blow properly ſignifies ſuch a kind of ſtroke as with an originally ſilent motion implied in ſm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar ſuddenly ended, as is ſhewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adheſion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, claſp, to claſp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, cloſe, to cloſe, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluſter.

Sp imply a kind of diſſipation or expanſion, eſpecially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from ſpargo or ſeparo: for example, ſpread, ſpring, ſprig, ſprout, ſprinkle, ſplit, ſplinter, ſpill, ſpit, ſputter, ſpatter.

Sl denote a kind of ſilent fall, or a leſs obſervable motion; as in ſlime, ſlide, ſlip, ſlipper, ſly, ſleight, ſlit, ſlow, ſlack, ſlight, ſling, ſlap.

And ſo likewiſe aſh, in craſh, raſh, gaſh, flaſh, claſh, laſh, ſlaſh, plaſh, traſh, indicate ſomething acting more nimbly and ſharply. But uſh, in cruſh, ruſh, guſh, fluſh, bluſh, bruſh, huſh, puſh, implies ſomething as acting more obtuſely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a ſwift and ſudden motion, not inſtantaneous but gradual, by the continued ſound ſh.

Thus in fling, ſling, ding, ſwing, cling, ſing, wring, ſting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the ſharpneſs of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very ſlender motion or tremor, at length indeed vaniſhing, but not ſuddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, ſink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute conſonant, there is alſo indicated a ſudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, ſprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or reiteration of ſmall acts. And the ſame frequency of acts, but leſs ſubtile by reaſon of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, ſpangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as alſo in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, ſtumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the ſame time the cloſe u implies ſomething obſcure or obtunded; and a congeries of conſonants mbl, denotes a confuſed kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, ſcamble, ſcramble, wamble, amble; but in theſe there is ſomething acute.

In nimble, the acuteneſs of the vowel denotes celerity. In ſparkle, ſp denotes diſſipation, ar an acute crackling, k a ſudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in ſprinkle, unleſs in may imply the ſubtility of the diſſipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuſe conſonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in ſqueek, ſqueak, ſqueal, ſquall, braul, wraul, yawl, ſpaul, ſcreek, ſhreek, ſhril, ſharp, ſhrivel, wrinkle, crack, craſh, claſh, gnaſh, plaſh, cruſh, huſh, biſſe, fiſſe, whiſt, ſoft, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, buz, buſtle, ſpindle, dwindle, twine, twiſt, and in many more, we may obſerve the agreement of ſuch ſort of ſounds with the things ſignified: and this ſo frequently happens, that ſcarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monoſyllable word, of which kind are almoſt all ours, emphatically expreſſes what in other languages can ſcarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or ſometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greateſt part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, reſemble.

Some verbs, which ſeem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the preſent tenſe, and ſome from the ſupines.

From the preſent are formed ſpend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; deſpiſe, deſpicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the ſupines, ſupplicate, ſupplico; demonſtrate, demonſtro; diſpoſe, diſpono; expatiate, expatior; ſuppreſs, ſupprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in queſt of originals. Many of theſe which ſeem ſelected as immediate deſcendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expoſe, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider; though indeed, even of theſe, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from ſome common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; waſp, veſpa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεῦγος; over, upper, ſuper, ὑπὲρ; am, ſum, εἰμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no leſs certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, eſpecially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oſcan and others, which have long become obſolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the Engliſh, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained ſome derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, achs, mit, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, ſear, grave, graff, to grave, to ſcrape, whole, from ἀξίνη, μίλα, πορθμος, θυγάτηρ, μεγάλος, μιγνύω, μήνη, ξηρός, γράφω, ὅλος. Since they received theſe immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the ſame fountain, though they be likewiſe found among the Latins?

Our anceſtors were ſtudious to form borrowed words, however long, into monoſyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the firſt ſyllable, eſpecially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewiſe conſonants of a weaker ſound, retaining the ſtronger, which ſeem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the ſame organ, in order that the ſound might become the ſofter; but eſpecially tranſpoſing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, ſpend; exemplum, ſample; excipio, ſcape; extraneus, ſtrange; extractum, ſtretch'd; excrucio, to ſcrew; exſcorio, to ſcour; excorio, to ſcourge; excortico, to ſcratch; and others beginning with ex: as alſo, emendo, to mend; epiſcopus, biſhop; in Daniſh, Biſp; epiſtola, piſtle; hoſpitale, ſpittle; Hiſpania, Spain; hiſtoria, ſtory.

Many of theſe etymologies are doubtful, and ſome evidently miſtaken.

The following are ſomewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Eliſabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p paſſing into b, as in biſhop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is reſtored in the middle: but for the old bar or bare; we now ſay boar; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for ſtane, ſtone; aprugna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a tranſpoſed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; ἀλωπὴξ, fox; cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piſcis, fiſh; and tranſpoſing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; muſtum, ſtum; defenſio, fence; diſpenſator, ſpencer; aſculto, eſcouter, Fr. ſcout; exſcalpo, ſcrape; reſtoring l inſtead of r, and hence ſcrap, ſcrable, ſcrawl; exculpo, ſcoop; exterritus, ſtart; extonitus, attonitus, ſtonn'd; ſtomachus, maw; offendo, fined; obſtipo, ſtop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v conſonant formerly ſounded like our w, and the modern ſound of the v conſonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the ſound of φ, and the modern ſound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, ſore, and hence ſorry, ſorrow, ſorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; ſcalenus, leaning, unleſs you would rather derive it from κλίνω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are ſyncopes ſomewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page, ποτήριον, pot; κύπελλα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; ſpecio, ſpeculor, ſpy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; ſedes epiſcopalis, ſee.

A vowel is alſo cut off in the middle, that the number of the ſyllables may be leſſened; as, amita, aunt; ſpiritus, ſpright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; ſeparo, to ſpare; ſtabilis, ſtable; ſtabulum, ſtable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, raul, wraul, brawl, rable, brable; quæſitio, queſt.

As alſo a conſonant, or at leaſt one of a ſofter ſound, or even a whole ſyllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; ſecurus, ſure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; ſubtilis, ſubtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; ſubitaneus, ſuddain, ſoon; ſuperare, to ſoar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, ſtain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may ſeem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακὸς, kyrk, church; preſbyter, prieſt; ſacriſtanus, ſexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φηγα, beech; f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a-kin; frigeſco, freeze; frigeſco, freſh, ſc into ſh, as above in biſhop, fiſh, ſo in ſcapha, ſkiff, ſkip, and refrigeſco, refreſh; but vireſco, freſh; phlebotomus, fleam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; ſcutifer, ſquire; pœnitentia, penance; ſanctuarium, ſanctuary, ſentry; quæſitio, chaſe; perquiſitio, purchaſe; anguilla, eel; inſula, iſle, ile, iſland, iland; inſuletta, iſlet, ilet; eyght and more contractedly ey, whence Owſney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to ſcan; namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the uſual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not uſe x, writ cſamen, or ſcamen is contracted into ſcan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into ſciame;

for which we ſay ſwarme, by inſerting r to denote the murmuring; theſaurus, ſtore; ſedile, ſtool; υετὸς, wet; ſudo, ſweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; ſuccus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chauſe, chauſſe, Fr. hoſe; extinguo, ſtanch, ſquench, quench, ſtint; foras, forth; ſpecies, ſpice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; αἰὼν, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, ſcrape, ſcrabble, ſcrawl; extravagus, ſtray, ſtraggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recoglio, recoil; ſevero, ſwear; ſtridulus, ſhrill; procurator, proxy; pulſo, to puſh; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vaneſco, vanui, wane; ſyllabere, to ſpell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may ſeem harſher, yet may not be rejected, for it at leaſt appears, that ſome of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whoſe etymology is acknowledged by every body; as Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Eliſabeth, Betty, Beſs; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawkes; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthew; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflee, gilofer, Fr. gilliflower, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroſelinum, parſly; portulaca, purſlain; cydonium, quince; cydonyatum, quiddeny; perſicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to earwig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choſes, kickſhaws. Since the origin of theſe, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, eſpecially as they ſo much affected monoſyllables; and to make them ſound the ſofter, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, tranſpoſing, and ſoftening them.

But while we derive theſe from the Latin, I do not mean to ſay, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Daniſh, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and ſome taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The ſame word, according to its different ſignifications, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at leaſt if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fiſh, from perca; but perch, a meaſure, from pertica, and likewiſe to perch. To ſpell is from ſyllaba; but ſpell, an inchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are ſo fixed in lands, that none can paſs them againſt the maſter's will, from expello; and ſpell, a meſſenger, from epiſtola; whence goſpel, good-ſpell, or god-ſpell. Thus freeſe, or freeze, from frigeſco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freeſe, for cloth, from Friſia, or perhaps from frigeſco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monoſyllables, compounded of two or more words, at leaſt ſerving inſtead of compounds, and compriſing the ſignification of more words than one; as, from ſcrip and roll comes ſcroll; from proud and dance, prance; from ſt, of the verb ſtay or ſtand and out, is made ſtout; from ſtout and hardy, ſturdy; from ſp of ſpit or ſpew, and out, comes ſpout; from the ſame ſp, with the termination in, is ſpin; and adding out, ſpin out; and from the ſame ſp, with it, is ſpit, which only differs from ſpout in that it is ſmaller, and with leſs noiſe and force; but ſputter is, becauſe of the obſcure u, ſomething between ſpit and ſpout; and by reaſon of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noiſe, but obſcurely confuſed: whereas ſpatter, on account of the ſharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more diſtinct noiſe, in which it chiefly differs from ſputter. From the ſame ſp, and the termination ark, comes ſpark, ſignifying a ſingle emiſſion of fire with a noiſe; namely, ſp the emiſſion, ar the more acute noiſe, and k, the mute conſonant, intimates its being ſuddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative ſparkle. The ſame ſp, by adding r, that is ſpr, implies a more lively impetus of diffuſing or expanding itſelf; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes ſpring; its vigour ſpr imports, its ſharpneſs the termination ing, and laſtly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute conſonant g, denotes the ſudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary ſignification, of a ſingle, not a complicated exilition. Hence we call ſpring whatever has an elaſtick force; as alſo a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to ſpring, to germinate; and ſpring, one of the four ſeaſons. From the ſame ſpr and out, is formed ſprout, and with the termination ig, ſprig; of which the following, for the moſt part, is the difference: ſprout, of a groſſer ſound, imports a fatter or groſſer bud; ſprig, of a ſlenderer ſound, denotes a ſmaller ſhoot. In like manner, from ſtr of the verb ſtrive, and out, comes ſtrout and ſtrut. From the ſame ſtr, and the termination uggle, is made ſtruggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noiſe, by reaſon of the obſcure ſound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll, is made trull; and almoſt in the ſame ſenſe is trundle, from throw or thruſt, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In theſe obſervations it is eaſy to diſcover great ſagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the deſire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often ſo made, that by the ſame licenſe any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no diſtinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and thoſe which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the Engliſh language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harſhneſs and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That ſome of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The eſtabliſhed practice of grammarians requires that I ſhould here treat of the Syntax; but our language has ſo little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its conſtruction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally neglected it; and Johnſon, whoſe deſire of ſollowing the writers upon the learned languages made him think a ſyntax indiſpenſably neceſſary, has publiſhed ſuch petty obſervations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and perſon; as, Thou flieſt from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two ſubſtantives the noun poſſeſſive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The ſun's heat.

Verbs tranſitive require an oblique caſe: as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepoſitions require an oblique caſe: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He ſays this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for thoſe that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Proſody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buommattei; that of the French by Deſmarais; and that of the Engliſh by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnſon though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to inſert them.

Proſody compriſes orthoephy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of verſification.

Pronunciation is juſt when every letter has its proper ſound, and when every ſyllable has its proper accent, or which in Engliſh verſification is the ſame, its proper quantity.

The ſounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not eaſily to be given, being ſubject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I ſhall here propoſe.

1. Of diſſyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former ſyllable is commonly accented, as chíldiſh, kíngdom, ácteſt, ácted, tóilſome, lóver, ſcóffer, faírer, fóremoſt, zéalous, fúlneſs, gódly, méekly, ártiſt.

2. Diſſyllables formed by prefixing a ſyllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begét, to beſeém, to beſtów.

3. Of diſſyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former ſyllable; as, to deſcánt, a déſcant; to cemént, a cément; to contráct, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs ſeldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter ſyllable; as, delíght, perfúme.

4. All diſſyllables ending in y, as cránny; in our, as lábour, fávour; in ow, as willow, wállow, except allów; in le, as báttle, bíble; in iſh, as bániſh; in ck, as cámbrick, cáſſock; in ter, as to bátter; in age, as coúrage; in en, as fáſten; in et, as quíet, accent the former ſyllable.

5. Diſſyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter; have the accent on the former ſyllable.

6. Diſſyllable verbs terminating in a conſonant and e final, as compríſe, eſcápe; or having a diphthong in the laſt ſyllable, as appéaſe, revéal; or ending in two conſonants, as atténd, have the accent on the latter ſyllable.

7. Diſſyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter ſyllable, have commonly their accent on the latter ſyllable, as appláuſe; except words in ain, cértain, moúntain.

8. Triſſyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a ſyllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóvelineſs, ténderneſs, contémner, wággoner, phýſical, beſpátter, cómmenting, comménding, aſſúrance.

9. Triſſylables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion, accent the firſt.

10. Triſſyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the firſt ſyllable, as coúntenance, cóntinence, ármament, ímminent, élegant, própagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the laſt, as connívence, acquáintance; or the middle ſyllable hath a vowel before two conſonants, as promúlgate.

11. Triſſyllables ending in y, as éntity, ſpécify, líberty, víctory, ſúbſidy, commonly accent the firſt ſyllable.

12. Triſſyllables in re or le accent the firſt ſyllable, as légible, théatre, except diſcíple, and ſome words which have poſition, as exámple, epíſtle.

13. Triſſyllables in ude commonly accent the firſt ſylla- as plénitude.

Triſſyllables ending in ator or atour, as creátour, or the middle ſyllable a diphthong, as endeávour; or a vowel before two conſonants as doméſtick, accent the middle ſyllable.

15. Triſſyllables that have their accent on the laſt ſyllable are commonly French, as acquiéſce, repartée, magazíne, or words formed by prefixing one or two ſyllables to an acute ſyllable, as immatúre, overchárge.

16. Polyſyllables, or words of more than three ſyllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, comméndable, commúnicableneſs. We ſhould therefore ſay diſpútable, indiſpútable, rather than díſputable, indíſputable; and advértiſement rather than adværtíſement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as ſalvátion, perturbátion concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as ámicable, unleſs the ſecond ſyllable have a vowel before two conſonants, as combúſtible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, volúptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as puſillanímity, actívity.

Theſe rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but propoſed as uſeful. Almoſt every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in Engliſh, as in other tongues, much muſt be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have eſcaped my obſervation.

Versification is the arrangement of a certain number of ſyllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verſes are either iambick, as alóft, creáte; or trochaick, as hóly, lófty.

Our iambick meaſure compriſes verſes

Of four ſyllables,

Moſt good, moſt fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's loſt;
For all the coſt
Words can beſtow,
So poorly ſhow
Upon your praiſe,
That all the ways
Senſe hath come ſhort. Drayton.

With raviſh'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of ſix,
This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not ſing an ode?
Or ſhall that holy fire,
In us that ſtrongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmoſt Peak
Awhile we do remain,
Amongſt the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to ſleet and rain,
No ſport our hours ſhall break,
To exerciſe our vein.

Who though bright Phœbus' beams
Refreſh the ſouthern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,

And by old Cambers ſtreams
Be many wonders found.

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in ſilver ſwathes,
And what of all moſt dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T' aſſwage breem winter's ſcathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obſcure,
Where wholſome is the air,
Or where the moſt impure,
All times, and every where,
The muſe is ſtill in ure. Drayton.

Of eight, which is the uſual meaſure for ſhort poems,

And may at laſt my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and moſſy cell,
Where I may ſit, and nightly ſpell
Of ev'ry ſtar the ſky doth ſhew,
And ev'ry herb that ſips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common meaſure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Full in the midſt of this created ſpace,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and ſkies, there ſtands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating ſound.
The palace of loud Fame her ſeat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the ſummit of a lofty tow'r;
A thouſand winding entries long and wide
Receive of freſh reports a flowing tide.
A thouſand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the buſy trade.
'Tis built of braſs, the better to diffuſe
The ſpreading ſounds, and multiply the news;
Where echo's in repeated echo's play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor ſilence is within, nor voice expreſs,
But a deaf noiſe of ſounds that never ceaſe;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore
Of tides, receding from th' inſulted ſhore;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to diſtance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crouds, or iſſuing forth, or entring in:
A thorough-fare of news; where ſome deviſe
Things never heard, ſome mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty ſounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all theſe meaſures the accents are to be placed on even ſyllables; and every line conſidered by itſelf is more harmonious, as this rule is more ſtrictly obſerved. The variations neceſſary to pleaſure belong to the art of poetry, not the rules of grammar.

Our trochaick meaſures are

Of three ſyllables,
Here we may
Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys Walton's Angler
Of five,
In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy. Old Ballad.
Of ſeven,
Faireſt piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

In theſe meaſures the accent is to be placed on the odd ſyllables.

Theſe are the meaſures which are now in uſe, and above the reſt thoſe of ſeven, eight, and ten ſyllables. Our ancient poets wrote verſes ſometimes of twelve ſyllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian ſhires their heads that bear ſo high,
And farth'ſt ſurvey their ſoils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchleſs crowds,
The neareſt that are ſaid to kiſs the wand'ring clouds,
Eſpecial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That ſhe of all the reſt neglected was ſo long;
Alledging for herſelf, when through the Saxon's pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's ſetting ſide
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Thoſe whom devouring war elſe every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beſide (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe reſign'd her ancient right,
A conſtant maiden ſtill ſhe only did remain,
The laſt her genuine laws which ſtoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things;
So only ſhe is rich, in mountains, meres, and ſprings,
And holds herſelf as great in her ſuperfluous waſte,
As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of ſuch a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or elſe would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is diſtract.

The meaſures of twelve and fourteen ſyllables, were often mingled by our old poets, ſometimes in alternate lines, and ſometimes in alternate couplets.

The verſe of twelve lines, called an Alexandrine, is now only uſed to diverſify heroick lines.

Waller was ſmooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verſe, the full-reſounding line,
The long majeſtick march, and energy divine. Pope.

The pauſe in the Alexandrine muſt be at the ſixth ſyllable.

The verſe of fourteen ſyllables is now broken into a ſoft lyrick meaſure of verſes, conſiſting alternately of eight ſyllables and ſix.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter ſpace. Fenton.
When all ſhall praiſe, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to ſee. Lewis to Pope.
Beneath this tomb an infant lies
To earth whoſe body lent,
Hereafter ſhall more glorious riſe,
But not more innocent.
When the Archangel's trump ſhall blow,
And ſouls to bodies join,

What crowds ſhall wiſh their lives below
Had been as ſhort as thine. Weſley.

We have another meaſure very quick and lively, and therefore much uſed in ſongs, which may be called the anapeſtick, in which the accent reſts upon every third ſyllable.

May I góvern my páſſions with ábſolute ſwáy,
And grow wíſer and bétter as lífe wears awáy.
Dr. Pope.

In this meaſure a ſyllable is often retrenched from the firſt foot, as Diógenes ſúrly and proúd. Dr. Pope.

When préſent, we lóve, and when ábſent agrée,
I thínk not of I'ris, nor I'ris of mé. Dryden.

Theſe meaſures are varied by many combinations, and ſometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick meaſure.

'Tis the divinity that ſtirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itſelf that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addiſon.

So in that of eight ſyllables,
They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded. Prior.

In that of ſeven,
For reſiſtance I could fear none,
But with twenty ſhips had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Haſt atchiev'd with ſix alone. Glover.

In that of ſix,
'Twas when the ſeas were roaring,
With hollow blaſts of wind,
A damſel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd. Gay.

In the anapeſtick,
When terrible tempeſts aſſail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But ſkilful induſtry ſteers right. Ballad.

To theſe meaſures, and their laws, may be reduced every ſpecies of Engliſh verſe.

Our verſification admits of few licenſes, except a ſynalœpha, or eliſion of e in the before a vowel, as th'eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept; and a ſynæreſis, by which two ſhort vowels coaleſce into one ſyllable, as queſtion, ſpecial; or a word is contracted by the expulſion of a ſhort vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the Engliſh language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a maſter to thoſe that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for ſuch as are not yet initiated in the ſchools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at laſt ineffectual.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A, The firſt letter of the European alphabets, has, in the Engliſh language, three different ſounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and ſlender.

The broad ſound, reſembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monoſyllables, as all, wall, malt, ſalt; in which a is pronounced as au in cauſe, or aw in law. Many of theſe words were anciently written with au, as ſault, waulk; which happens to be ſtill retained in fault. This was probably the ancient ſound of the Saxons; ſince it is almoſt uniformly preſerved in the ruſtick pronunciation, and the northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obſcurely in fancy, faſt, &c.

A ſlender or cloſe, is the peculiar a of the Engliſh language, reſembling the ſound of the French e maſculine, or diphthong ai in païs, or perhaps a middle ſound between them, or between the a and e; to this the Arabick a is ſaid nearly to approach. Of this ſound we have examples in the words, place, face, waſte, and all thoſe that terminate in ation; as, relation, nation, generation.

A is ſhort, as, glaſs, graſs; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, as, plane, or by an i added, as, plain. The ſhort a is open, the long a cloſe.

1. A, an article ſet before nouns of the ſingular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way; that is, any man. This article has no plural ſignification. Before a word, beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

2. A, taken materially, or for itſelf, is a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

3. A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is conſidered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting ſome action not yet finiſhed; as, I am a walking. It alſo ſeems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local ſurnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other caſes, it ſeems to ſignify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloë went. Prior.

They go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryd.

May peace ſtill ſlumber by theſe purling fountains!
Which we may every year
Find when we come a fiſhing here. Wotton.

Now the men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

He will knap the ſpears a pieces with his teeth.
Mores Antid. Athm.

Another falls a ringing a Peſcennius Niger, and judiciouſly diſtinguiſhes the ſound of it to be modern.
Addiſon on Medals.

4. A has a peculiar ſignification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we ſay, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ſhip's crew gained a thouſand pounds a man.

The river Inn paſſes through a wide open country, during all its courſe through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addiſon on Italy.

5. A is uſed in burleſque poetry, to lengthen out a ſyllable, without adding to the ſenſe.

A'BBA. n. ſ. [Heb. אב] A Syriac word, which ſignifies father.

A'bbacy. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See Abbey.

According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itſelf, ſince an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a ſecular perſon, who has the care of ſouls, is ſometimes, in the canon law, alſo ſtiled an abbot. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'bbess. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatiſſa, from whence the Saxon abudiſſe, then probably abbateſs, and by contraction abbeſſe in Fr. and abbeſs, Eng.] The ſuperiour or governeſs of a nunnery or monaſtery of women.

——————————They fled
Into this abbey, whither we purſued them;
And here the abbeſs ſhuts the gate on us,
And will not ſuffer us to fetch him out. Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

I have a ſiſter, abbeſs in Terceras,
Who loſt her lover on her bridal-day. Dryd. D. Sebaſt.

Conſtantia, as ſoon as the ſolemnities of her reception were over, retired with the abbeſs into her own apartment. Addiſon.

A'bbey, or Abby. n. ſ. [Lat. abbatia; from whence probably firſt Abbacy; which ſee.] A monaſtery of religious perſons, whether men or women; diſtinguiſhed from religious houſes of other denominations by larger privileges. See Abbot.

With eaſy roads he came to Leiceſter;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably received him. Shak.

A'bbey-Lubber. n. ſ. [See Lubber.] A ſlothful loiterer in a religious houſe, under pretence of retirement and auſterity.

This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber: this is but a diminutive ſucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

A'BBOT. n. ſ. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב father, which ſenſe was ſtill implied; ſo that the abbots were called patres, and abbeſſes matres monaſterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paterne, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowſhip of canons. Of theſe, ſome in England were mitred, ſome not: thoſe that were mitred, were exempted from the juriſdiction of the dioceſan, having in themſelves epiſcopal authority within their precincts, and being alſo lords of parliament. The other ſort were ſubject to the dioceſan in all ſpiritual government. Cowel.

ABECEDA'RIAN. n. ſ. [from the names of a, b, c, the three firſt letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or firſt rudiments of literature.

This word is uſed by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienſes, where mentioning Farnaby the critick, he relates, that, in ſome part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

A'BECEDARY. adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.] 1. Belonging to the alphabet. 2. Inſcribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the ſympathy of two needles touched with the loadſtone, and placed in the centre of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, deſcribed round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

ABE'D. adv. [from a, for at, and Bed.] In bed.

It was a ſhame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed: when ſhe was of their age, ſhe would have made a handkerchief by that time o'day. Sidney, b. ii.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel
All night devoutly watch'd. Dryd. Span. Friar.

ABE'RRANCE. }
ABE'RRANCY. } n. ſ. [from aberro, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an errour; a miſtake; a falſe opinion.

They do not only ſwarm with errors, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deſerts his reaſon, or complies with their abberrancies. Br. Vulg. Er. b. i. c. 3.

Could a man be compoſed to ſuch an advantage of conſtitution, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances, as now. Glanville's Scepſis Scien. c. 16.

ABE'RRANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way. Dict.

ABERRA'TION. n. ſ. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common or from the right track.

If it be a miſtake, there is no hereſy in ſuch an harmleſs aberration; the probability of it will render it a lapſe of eaſy pardon. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 11.

ABE'RRING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going aſtray.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

Divers were out in their account, aberring ſeveral ways from the true and juſt compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

To ABERU'NCATE. v. a. [averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Dict.

To ABE'T. v. a. [from betan, Sax. ſignifying to enkindle or animate.] To puſh forward another, to ſupport him in his deſigns by connivance, encouragement, or help. It was once indifferent, but is almoſt always taken, by modern writers, in an ill ſenſe; as may be ſeen in ABETTER.

To abet ſignifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or ſet on. Cowel.

Then ſhall I ſoon, quoth he, return again,
Abet that virgin's cauſe diſconſolate,
And ſhortly back return. Fairy Queen, b. i.

A widow, who by ſolemn vows
Contracted to me, for my ſpouſe,
Combin'd with him to break her word,
And has abetted all. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

Men lay ſo great weight upon right opinions, and eagerneſs of abetting them, that they account that the unum neceſſarium. Decay of Piety.

They abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furniſhed ſupplies to the weaker ſide, leſt there ſhould be an end put to theſe fatal diviſions. Addiſon's Freeholder, No. 28.

ABE′TMENT. n. ſ. The act of abetting. Dict.

ABE′TTER, or ABE′TTOR. n. ſ. He that abets; the ſupporter or encourager of another.

Whilſt calumny has two ſuch potent abetters, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and deſigning, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

You ſhall be ſtill plain Torriſmond with me,
Th' abettor, partner, (if you like the name)
The huſband of a tyrant, but no king;
Till you deſerve that title by your juſtice.
Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

Theſe conſiderations, though they may have no influence on the multitude, ought to ſink into the minds of thoſe, who are their abettors, and who, if they eſcape puniſhment here, muſt know, that theſe ſeveral miſchiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Add. Free. No. 50.

ABEY′ANCE. n. ſ. [from the French abayer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Diſcontinuance, is thus uſed. The right of fee ſimple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment and conſideration of the law. (5.) Being as I am, why didſt not thou
Command me abſolutely not to go,
Going into ſuch danger, as thou ſaidſt? Par. Loſt. b. ix.

A'BSOLUTENESS. n. ſ. [from abſolute.] 1. Completeneſs. 2. Freedom from dependance, or limits. 3. Deſpoticiſm.

(1. 2.) The abſoluteneſs and illimitedneſs of his commiſſion was generally much ſpoken of. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is nothing that can raiſe a man to that generous abſoluteneſs of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly: but that which gives him that happineſs within himſelf, for which men depend upon others. South's Serm.

(3.) He kept a ſtrait hand on his nobility, and choſe rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obſequious to him, but had leſs intereſt in the people: which made for his abſoluteneſs, but not for his ſafety. Bac. Hen. VII.

They dreſs up power with all the ſplendor and temptation abſoluteneſs can add to it. Locke.

ABSOLU'TION. n. ſ. [abſolutio, Lat.] 1. Acquittal. 2. The remiſſion of ſins, or penance, declared by eccleſiaſtical authority.

(1.) Abſolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a perſon by ſome final ſentence of law; alſo a temporary diſcharge of his farther attendance upon a meſne proceſs, through a failure or defect in pleading; as it does likewiſe in the canon law, where, and among divines, it likewiſe ſignifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of ſome ſentence pronounced either in a court of law, or elſe in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of abſolution, termed judicial, and another, ſtiled a declaratory or extrajudicial abſolution. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

(2.) The abſolution pronounced by a prieſt, whether papiſt or proteſtant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the perſon, ſo abſolved, confidence towards God. South's Serm.

A'BSOLUTORY. adj. [abſolutorius, Lat.] That which abſolves.

Though an abſolutory ſentence ſhould be pronounced in favour of the perſons, upon the account of nearneſs of blood; yet, if adultery ſhall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded againſt as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'BSONANT. adj. [See Abſonous.] Contrary to reaſon, wide from the purpoſe.

A'BSONOUS. adj. [abſonus, Lat. ill-ſounding.] Abſurd, contrary to reaſon. It is not much in uſe, and it may be doubted whether it ſhould be followed by to or from.

To ſuppoſe an uniter of a middle conſtitution, that ſhould partake of ſome of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties: yea, moſt abſonous to our reaſon.
Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 4.

To ABSO'RB. v. a. [abſorbeo, Lat. preter. abſorbed; part. pret. abſorbed, or abſorpt.] 1. To ſwallow up. 2. To ſuck up. See ABSORBENT.

(1.) Moſes imputed the deluge to the diſruption of the abyſs; and St. Peter, to the particular conſtitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be abſorpt in water. Burn. Theo.

————Some tokens ſhew
Of fearleſs friendſhip, and their ſinking mates
Suſtain; vain love, tho' laudable, abſorpt
By a fierce eddy, they together found
The vaſt profundity. Phillips.

(2.) The evils that come of exerciſe are that it doth abſorb and attenuate the moiſture of the body. Bacon.

Suppoſing the forementioned conſumption ſhould prove ſo durable, as to abſorb and extenuate the ſaid ſanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts muſt neceſſarily come into danger. Harv. on Conſ.

While we perſpire, we abſorb the outward air. Arbuth.

ABSO'RBENT. n. ſ. [abſorbens, Lat.]

A medicine that, by the ſoftneſs or poroſity of its parts, either cauſes the aſperities of pungent humours, or dries away ſuperfluous moiſture in the body. Quincy.

There is a third claſs of ſubſtances, commonly called abſorbents; as, the various kinds of ſhells, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which likewiſe raiſe an efferveſcence with acids, and are therefore called alkalis, tho' not ſo properly, for they are not ſalts. Arb. on Alim.

ABSO'RPT. part. [from abſorb.] Swallowed up; uſed as well, in a figurative ſenſe, of perſons, as, in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked theſe five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the preſent world, its cuſtoms and its manners, to be fully poſſeſſed and abſorpt in the paſt. Pope's Letters.

ABSO'RPTION. n. ſ. [from abſorb.] The act of ſwallowing up.

It was below the dignity of thoſe ſacred penmen, or the Spirit of God that directed them, to ſhew us the cauſes of this diſruption, or of this abſorption; this is left to the enquiries of men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTA'IN. v. n. [abſtineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's ſelf any gratification; with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and difficult,
Converſing, looking, loving, to abſtain
From love's due rights, nuptial embraces ſweet;
And, with deſires, to languiſh without hope.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x. l. 993.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently deſirous of any thing, ſo that a man cannot abſtain from it, is to loſe a man's liberty, and to become a ſervant of meat and drink, or ſmoke. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Even then the doubtful billows ſcarce abſtain
From the toſs'd veſſel on the troubled main. Dryd. Virgil.

ABSTE'MIOUS. adj. [abſtemius, Lat.] Temperate, ſober, abſtinent, refraining from exceſs or pleaſures. It is uſed of perſons; as, an abſtemious hermit; and of things; as, an abſtemious diet. It is ſpoken likewiſe of things that cauſe temperance.

The inſtances of longevity are chiefly amongſt the abſtemious. Abſtinence in extremity will prove a mortal diſeaſe; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Clytorean ſtreams the love of wine expel,
(Such is the virtue of the abſtemious well)
Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
Extinguiſhes, and balks the drunken god:
Or that Melampus (ſo have ſome aſſur'd)
When the mad Prætides with charms he cur'd,
And powerful herbs, both charms and ſimples caſt
Into the ſober ſpring, where ſtill their virtues laſt. Dryd. Fables.

ABSTE'MIOUSLY. adv. [from abſtemious.] Temperately, ſoberly, without indulgence.

ABSTE'MIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abſtemious.

ABSTE'NTION. n. ſ. [from abſtineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or reſtraining; reſtraint.

To ABSTE'RGE. v. a. [abſtergo, Lat.] To cleanſe by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTE'RGENT. adj. Cleanſing; having a cleanſing quality.

To ABSTE'RSE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanſe, to purify; a word very little in uſe, and leſs analogical than abſterge.

Nor will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the ſtomach of the oſtrich, no alteration; but we ſuſpect this effect rather from corroſion than digeſtion; not any tendence to chilification by the natural heat, but rather ſome attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the ſtomach, which may abſterſe and ſhave the ſcorious parts thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ABSTE'RSION. n. ſ. [abſterſio, Lat.] The act of cleanſing. See ABSTERGE.

Abſterſion is plainly a ſcouring off, or inciſion of the more viſcous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which ſcoureth linen cloth ſpeedily from the foulneſs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, No. 42.

ABSTE'RSIVE. adj. [from abſterge.] That has the quality of abſterging or cleanſing.

It is good, after purging, to uſe apozemes and broths, not ſo much opening as thoſe uſed before purging; but abſterſive and mundifying clyſters alſo are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

A tablet ſtood of that abſterſive tree,
Where Æthiops' ſwarthy bird did build to neſt.
Sir John Denham.

There, many a flow'r abſterſive grew,
Thy fav'rite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Miſcel.

A'BSTINENCE. n. ſ. [abſtinentia, Lat.] 1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from. 2. Faſting, or forbearance of neceſſary food. It is generally diſtinguiſhed from temperance, as the greater degree from the leſs; ſometimes as ſingle performances from habits; as, a day of abſtinence, and a life of temperance.

(1.) Becauſe the abſtinence from a preſent pleaſure, that offers itſelf, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that that operates after the ſame manner pain does, and leſſens, in our thoughts, what is future; and ſo forces us, as it were, blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

(2.) Say, can you faſt? your ſtomachs are too young:
And abſtinence ingenders maladies. Shakeſp. Love's Lab. Loſt.

And the faces of them, which have uſed abſtinence, ſhall ſhine above the ſtars; whereas our faces ſhall be blacker than darkneſs. 2 Eſdras, vii. 55.

Religious men, who hither muſt be ſent
As awful guides of heavenly government;
To teach you penance, faſts, and abſtinence,
To puniſh bodies for the ſoul's offence. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

A'BSTINENCY. n. ſ. The ſame with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards for the abſtinencies, or riots, of this preſent life, under the prejudices of ſhort or finite, the promiſes and threats of Chriſt would loſe much of their virtue and energy. Hammond's Fundam.

A'BSTINENT. adj. [abſtinens, Lat.] That uſes abſtinence, in oppoſition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is uſed chiefly of perſons.

ABSTO'RTED. adj. [abſtortus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRA'CT. v. a. [abſtraho, Lat.] 1. To take one thing from another. 2. To ſeparate by diſtillation. 3. To ſeparate ideas. 4. To reduce to an epitome.

(1.) Could we abſtract from theſe pernicious effects, and ſuppoſe this were innocent, it would be too light to be matter of praiſe. Decay of Piety.

(2.) Having dephlegmed ſpirit of ſalt, and gently abſtracted the whole ſpirit, there remaineth in the retort a ſtyptical ſubſtance. Boyle.

(3.) Thoſe, who cannot diſtinguiſh, compare and abſtract, would hardly be able to underſtand and make uſe of language, or judge or reaſon to any tolerable degree. Locke.

(4.) If we would fix in the memory the diſcourſes we hear, or what we deſign to ſpeak, let us abſtract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

A'BSTRACT. adj. [abſtractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.] 1. Separated from ſomething elſe; generally uſed with relation to mental perceptions; as, abſtract mathematicks, abſtract terms, in oppoſition to concrete. 2. With the particle from.

(1.) Mathematics, in its latitude, is uſually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abſtract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that which is mixed, doth conſider the quantity of ſome particular determinate ſubject. So aſtronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, muſic of ſounds, and mechanics of weights and powers. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Abſtract terms ſignify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the ſubject in which it is; as, whiteneſs, roundneſs, length, breadth, wiſdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logick.

(2.) Another fruit from the conſidering things in themſelves, abſtract from our opinions and other mens notions and diſcourſes on them, will be, that each man will purſue his thoughts in that method, which will be moſt agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehenſion of what it ſuggeſts to him. Locke.

A'BSTRACT. n. ſ. [from the verb.] 1. A ſmaller quantity, containing the virtue and power of a greater. 2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts. 3. The ſtate of being abſtracted, or disjoined.

(1.) You ſhall there find a man, who is the abſtract
Of all faults all men follow. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are falſe, theſe epithets are ſmall;
You're then the things, and abſtract of them all. Dryd. Aur.

(2.) When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the ſentiments he had remarked; ſo that he could give a tolerable analyſis and abſtract of every treatiſe he had read, juſt after he had finiſhed it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

(3.) The hearts of great princes, if they be conſidered, as it were in abſtract, without the neceſſity of ſtates, and circumſtances of time, can take no full and proportional pleaſure in the exerciſe of any narrow bounty. Wotton.

ABSTRA'CTED. part. adj. [from abſtract.] 1. Separated; disjoined. 2. Refined, purified. 3. Abſtruſe; difficult. 4. Abſent of mind, inattentive to preſent objects; as, an abſtracted ſcholar.

(1.) That ſpace the evil one abſtracted ſtood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd
Stupidly good. Milton.

(2.) Abſtracted ſpiritual love, they like
Their ſouls exhal'd. Donne.

ABSTRA'CTEDLY. adv. With abſtraction, ſimply, ſeparately from all contingent circumſtances.

Or whether more abſtractedly we look,
Or on the writers, or the written book:
Whence, but from heav'n, could men unſkill'd in arts,
In ſeveral ages born, in ſeveral parts,
Weave ſuch agreeing truths? or how, or why
Should all conſpire to cheat us with a lie?
Unaſk'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.
Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRA'CTION. n. ſ. [abſtractio, Lat.] 1. The act of abſtracting. 2. The ſtate of being abſtracted. 3. Abſence of mind; inattention. 4. Diſregard of worldly objects.

(1.) The word abſtraction ſignifies a withdrawing ſome part of an idea from other parts of it; by which means, ſuch abſtracted ideas are formed, as neither repreſent any thing corporeal or ſpiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watts's Logick.

(4.) A hermit wiſhes to be praiſed for his abſtraction. Pope's Let.

ABSTRA'CTIVE. adj. [from abſtract.] Having the power or quality of abſtracting.

ABSTRA'CTLY. adv. [from abſtract.] In an abſtract manner, abſolutely, without reference to any thing elſe.

Matter abſtractly and abſolutely conſidered, cannot have borne an infinite duration now paſt and expired. Bentley's Serm.

ABSTRA'CTNESS. n. ſ. [from abſtract.] Subtilty; ſeparation from all matter or common notion.

I have taken ſome pains to make plain and familiar to your thoughts, truths, which eſtabliſhed prejudice, or the abſtractneſs of the ideas themſelves, might render difficult. Locke.

ABSTRI'CTED. part. adj. [abſtrictus, Lat.] Unbound. Dict.

To ABSTRI'NGE. v. a. To unbind. Dict.

To ABSTRU'DE. v. a. [abſtrudo, Lat.] To thruſt off, or pull away. Dict.

ABSTRU'SE. adj. [abſtruſus, Lat. thruſt out of ſight.] 1. Hidden. 2. Difficult, remote from conception or apprehenſion. It is oppoſed to obvious and eaſy.

(1) —— Th' eternal eye, whoſe ſight diſcerns
Abſtruſeſt thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly before him, ſaw, without their light,
Rebellion riſing. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v. l. 712.

(2.) So ſpake our Sire, and, by his count'nance ſeem'd
Entring on ſtudious thoughts abſtruſe. Par. Loſt, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abſtruſe, and not eaſy to be diſtinguiſhed, eſpecially thoſe of the tongue, which is moved through the help of many muſcles, ſo eaſily, and habitually, and variouſly, that we are ſcarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed. Holder.

No man could give a rule of the greateſt beauties, and the knowledge of them was ſo abſtruſe, that there was no manner of ſpeaking which could expreſs them. Dryd. Du Freſnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY. adv. In an abſtruſe manner; obſcurely, not plainly, or obviouſly.

ABSTRU'SENESS. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.] The quality of being abſtruſe; difficulty, obſcurity.

It is not oftentimes ſo much what the ſcripture ſays, as what ſome men perſuade others it ſays, that makes it ſeem obſcure, and that as to ſome other paſſages that are ſo indeed, ſince it is the abſtruſeneſs of what is taught in them, that makes them almoſt inevitably ſo; it is little leſs ſaucy, upon ſuch a ſcore, to find fault with the ſtyle of the ſcripture, than to do ſo with the authour for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.] 1. Abſtruſeneſs. 2. That which is abſtruſe. A word ſeldom uſed.

Authors are alſo ſuſpicious, nor greedily to be ſwallowed, who pretend to write of ſecrets, to deliver antipathies, ſympathies, and the occult abſtruſities of things. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To ABSU'ME. v. a. [abſumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waſte; to eat up. An uncommon word.

That which had been burning an infinite time could never be burnt, no not ſo much as any part of it; for if it had burned part after part, the whole muſt needs be abſumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSU'RD. adj. [abſurdus, Lat.] 1. Unreaſonable, without judgment, as uſed of men. 2. Inconſiſtent, contrary to reaſon, uſed of ſentiments or practices.

(1.) Seeming wiſe men may make ſhift to get opinion; but let no man chooſe them for employment; for certainly you had better take for buſineſs a man ſomewhat abſurd, than over-formal. Bacon.

A man, who cannot write with wit on a proper ſubject, is dull and ſtupid; but one, who ſhews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and abſurd. Addiſon. Spect. No. 291.

(2.) The thing itſelf appeared deſireable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and deſire it; but then it was after a very irrational abſurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

But grant that thoſe can conquer, theſe can cheat,
'Tis phraſe abſurd to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wiſe, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
Pope's Eſſay on Man.

ABSU'RDITY. n. ſ. [from abſurd.] 1. The quality of being abſurd; want of judgment, applied to men; want of propriety, applied to things. 2. That which is abſurd; as, his travels were full of abſurdities. In which ſenſe it has a plural.

(1.) How clear ſoever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the abſurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

(2.) That ſatisfaction we receive from the opinion of ſome pre-eminence in ourſelves, when we ſee the abſurdities of another, or when we reflect on any paſt abſurdities of our own. Addiſon.

ABSU'RDLY. adv. [from abſurd.] After an abſurd manner; improperly, unreaſonably.

But man we find the only creature,
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when ſhe loudly cries, Forbear,
With obſtinacy fixes there;
And where his genius leaſt inclines,
Abſurdly bends his whole deſigns. Swift's Miſcellanies.

We may proceed yet further with the atheiſt, and convince him, that not only his principle is abſurd, but his conſequences alſo as abſurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSU'RDNESS. n. ſ. [from abſurd.] The quality of being abſurd; injudiciouſneſs, impropriety. See ABSURDITY; which is more frequently uſed.

ABU'NDANCE. n. ſ. [abondance, Fr.] 1. Plenty; a ſenſe chiefly poetical. 2. Great numbers. 3. A great quantity. 4. Exuberance, more than enough.

(1.) At the whiſper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance ſpreads my board. Craſhaw.
The doubled charge his ſubjects' love ſupplies,
Who, in that bounty, to themſelves are kind;
So glad Egyptians ſee their Nilus riſe,
And, in his plenty, their abundance find. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

(2.) The river Inn is ſhut up between mountains, covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peaſants are employed in hewing down the largeſt of theſe trees, that, after they are barked and cut into ſhape, are tumbled down. Addiſon on Italy.

(3.) Their chief enterprize was the recovery of the Holy-land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been ſhed with very ſmall benefit unto the Chriſtian ſtate. Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

(4.) For well I wot, moſt mighty ſovereign,
That all this famous antique hiſtory,
Of ſome, th' abundance of an idle brain,
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenſer.

ABU'NDANT. adj. [abundans, Lat.] 1. Plentiful. 2. Exuberant. 3. Fully ſtored. It is followed ſometimes by in, commonly by with. 4. It is applied generally to things, ſometimes to perſons.

(1.) —— Good, the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more. Par. Loſt, b. v.

(2.) If the veſſels are in a ſtate of too great rigidity, ſo as not to yield, a ſtrong projectile motion occaſions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; eſpecially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

(3.) The world began but ſome ages before theſe were found out, and was abundant with all things at firſt; and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put ſo much to the uſe of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiouſly. Burnet.

(4.) The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth. Exod. xxxiv. 6.

Abu'ndantly. adv. [from abundant.] 1. In plenty. 2. Amply, liberally, more than ſufficiently.

(1.) Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Geneſis, i. 20.

——— God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath alſo pour'd;
Inward and outward both, his image fair. Par. Loſt, b. viii.

(2.) Ye ſaw the French tongue abundantly purified. Sprat.

Heroic poetry has ever been eſteemed the greateſt work of human nature. In that rank has Ariſtotle placed it; and Longinus is ſo full of the like expreſſions, that he abundantly confirms the other's teſtimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly ſupplied in the imaginations of friendſhip, and the repeated influences of a conſtant converſation. Rogers's Serm.

To ABU'SE. v. a [abutor, abuſus, Lat.] In abuſe the verb, ſ has the ſound of z; in the noun, the common ſound. 1. To make an ill uſe of. 2. To violate; to defile. 3. To deceive, to impoſe upon. 4. To treat with rudeneſs, to reproach.

(1.) They that uſe this world, as not abuſing it; for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. 1 Cor. vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverſeneſs of men, no longer ſuffer his compaſſion to be abuſed. Rogers's Sermons.

(2.) Arachne figured how Jove did abuſe
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the ſea did bear. Spenſer.

(3.) ——— He perhaps,
Out of my weakneſs and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with ſuch ſpirits,
Abuſes me to damn me. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

The world hath been much abuſed by the opinion of making gold: the work itſelf I judge to be poſſible; but the means hitherto propounded, are, in the practice full of error. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. No. 126.

It imports the miſrepreſentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehenſions of men, abuſing their minds, with falſe notions; and ſo, by this artifice, making evil paſs for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Nor be with all theſe tempting words abus'd;
Theſe tempting words were all to Sappho us'd. Pope.

(4.) I am no ſtrumpet, but of life as honeſt
As you that thus abuſe me. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

But he mocked them, and laughed at them, and abuſed them ſhamefully, and ſpake proudly. 1 Mac. vii. 34.

Some praiſe at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the laſt opinion right.
A muſe by theſe is like a miſtreſs us'd,
This hour ſhe's idoliz'd, the next abus'd. Pope's Eſſ. on Crit.

The next criticiſm ſeems to be introduced for no other reaſon, but to mention Mr. Bickerſtaff, whom the author every where endeavours to imitate and abuſe. Addiſon.

Abu'se. n. ſ. [from the verb abuſe.] 1. The ill uſe of any thing. 2. A corrupt practice, bad cuſtom. 3. Seducement. 4. Unjuſt cenſure, rude reproach, contumely.

The caſting away things profitable for the ſuſtenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuſe of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

——— Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts beſt things
To worſt abuſe, or to their meaneſt uſe. Parad. Loſt, b. iv.

(2.) The nature of things is ſuch, that, if abuſes be not remedied, they will certainly encreaſe. Swift for Advancement of Religion.

(3.) Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and through the deceit abuſed me, and, after the abuſe, forſaken me, but that he muſt now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney, b. ii.

(4.) ——— I dark in light, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuſe and wrong. Samſ. Agon.

Abu'ser. n. ſ. [from the verb abuſe.] 1. He that makes an ill uſe. 2. He that deceives. 3. He that reproaches with rudeneſs. 4. A raviſher, a violater.

(1. 2.) Next thou, th' abuſer of thy prince's ear. Denb. Sophy.

Abu'sive. adj. [from abuſe.] 1. Practiſing abuſe. 2. Containing abuſe; as, an abuſive lampoon. 3. Deceitful; a ſenſe little uſed, yet not improper.

(1.) The tongue mov'd gently firſt, and ſpeech was low,
Till wrangling ſcience taught it noiſe and ſhow,
And wicked wit aroſe, thy moſt abuſive foe. Pope's Miſcel.

Dame Nature, as the learned ſhow,
Provides each animal its foe;
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geeſe, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To perſecute the muſe's fame,
On poets in all times abuſive,
From Homer down to Pope incluſive. Swift's Miſcel.

(2.) Next, Comedy appear'd with great applauſe,
Till her licentious and abuſive tongue

Shall this our lofty ſcene be acted o'er,
In ſtates unborn, and accents yet unknown.
Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Winds on your wings to heav'n her accents bear;
Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear. Dryd. Virg. Paſt. 3.

(4.) The tender accent of a woman's cry
Will paſs unheard, will unregarded die;
When the rough ſeaman's louder ſhouts prevail,
When fair occaſion ſhews the ſpringing gale. Prior.

To ACCE'NT. v. a. [from accentus, Lat.] 1. To pronounce, to ſpeak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules. 2. In poetry; to pronounce or utter in general. 3. To write or note the accents.

(1.) Having got ſomebody to mark the laſt ſyllable but one, where it is long, in words above two ſyllables (which is enough to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words) let her read daily in the goſpels, and avoid underſtanding them in Latin, if ſhe can. Locke on Education, § 177.

(2.) O my unhappy lines! you that before
Have ſerv'd my youth to vent ſome wanton cries,
And, now congeal'd with grief, can ſcarce implore
Strength to accent, Here my Albertus lies! Wotton.

To ACCE'NTUATE. v. a. [accentuer, Fr] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ACCENTUA'TION. n. ſ. [from accentuate.] 1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation. 2. Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCE'PT. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.] 1. To take with pleaſure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is diſtinguiſhed from receive, as ſpecific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving. 2. It is uſed in a kind of juridical ſenſe; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty. 3. In the language of the bible, to accept perſons, is to act with perſonal and partial regard. 4. It is ſometimes uſed with the particle of.

(1.) Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. Malachi, i. 10.

God is no reſpecter of perſons: but, in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciouſly pleaſed to accept this tender of my duty. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by ſubmitting ſway,
Yet have your humour moſt when you obey. Pope.

(2.) They ſlaughter'd many of the gentry, for whom no ſex or age could be accepted for excuſe. Sidney.

His promiſe Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the firſt he made. Dryden's Fables.

Thoſe who have defended the proceedings of our negociators at the treaty of Gertruydenburgh, dwell upon their zeal and patience in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands, but ſay nothing of the probability that France would ever accept them. Swift.

(3.) He will ſurely reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons. Job, xiii. 10.

(4.) I will appeaſe him with the preſent that goeth before me, and afterward I will ſee his face; peradventure he will accept of me. Geneſis, xxxii. 20.

ACCEPTABI'LITY. n. ſ. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his natural blood to be ſhed, for the remiſſion of our ſins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

ACCE'PTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by ſome with the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the ſecond, which is more analogical. 1. That which is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleaſing. It is uſed with the particle to before the perſon accepting.

This woman, whom thou mad'ſt to be my help,
And gav'ſt me as thy perfect gift, ſo good,
So fit, ſo acceptable, ſo divine,
That from her hand I could expect no ill. Par. Loſt, b. ii.

I do not ſee any other method left for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by uſing all honeſt arts to make themſelves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

After he had made a peace ſo acceptable to the church, and ſo honourable to himſelf, he died with an extraordinary reputation of ſanctity. Addiſon on Italy.

ACCE'PTABLENESS. n. ſ. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableneſs of that conjunction. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

ACCE'PTABLY. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; ſo as to pleaſe; with the particle to. For the accent, ſee ACCEPTABLE.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he ſuffers, ſo he be the friend of Chriſt; nor where nor when he prays, ſo he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.

If you can teach them to love and reſpect other people, they will as your age requires it, find ways to expreſs it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education, § 145.

ACCE'PTANCE. n. ſ [acceptance, Fr.] 1. Reception with approbation. 2. The meaning of a word as it is received or underſtood; acceptation is the word now commonly uſed.

(1.) By that acceptance of his ſovereignty, they alſo accepted of his laws; why then ſhould any other laws be now uſed amongſt them? Spenſer's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we muſt alſo tell him our noble acceptance of them. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thus I embolden'd ſpake, and freedom us'd
Permiſſive, and acceptance found. Par. Loſt, b. viii. l. 435.

Some men cannot be fools with ſo good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

(2.) That pleaſure is man's chiefeſt good, becauſe indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleaſure, is an aſſertion moſt certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only falſe but odious: for, according to this, pleaſure and ſenſuality paſs for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this ſenſe, alters the ſubject of the diſcourſe. South.

ACCE'PTANCE. [in law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himſelf, for ever, to allow a former fact done by another, whether it be in itſelf good or not. Cowel.

ACCEPTA'TION. n. ſ. [from accept.] 1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large ſenſe ſeems now wholly out of uſe. 2. Good reception, acceptance. 3. The ſtate of being acceptable; regard. 4. Acceptance in the juridical ſenſe. This ſenſe occurs rarely. 5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

(1.) Yet, poor ſoul! knows he no other, but that I do ſuſpect, neglect, yea, and deteſt him? For, every day, he finds one way or other to ſet forth himſelf unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldneſs of acceptation. Sidney, b. ii.

What is new finds better acceptation, than what is good or great. Denham's Sophy.

(2.) Cain, envious of the acceptation of his brother's prayer and ſacrifice, ſlew him; making himſelf the firſt manſlayer, and his brother the firſt martyr. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World, b. i.

(3.) Some things, although not ſo required of neceſſity, that, to leave them undone, excludeth from ſalvation, are, notwithſtanding, of ſo great dignity and acceptation with God, that moſt ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Hooker, b. ii.

They have thoſe enjoyments only as the conſequences of the ſtate of eſteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 53.

(4.) As, in order to the paſſing away a thing by gift, there is required a ſurrender of all right on his part that gives; ſo there is required alſo an acceptation on his part to whom it is given. South's Sermons.

(5.) Thereupon the earl of Lauderdale made a diſcourſe upon the ſeveral queſtions, and what acceptation theſe words, and expreſſions had. Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or ſolid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fixedneſs and coherency, and the moſt rapid inteſtine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentl. Serm.

An ACCE'PTER. n. ſ. [from accept.] The perſon that accepts.

ACCEPTILA'TION. n. ſ. [acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil law, importing the remiſſion of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, teſtifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCE'PTION. n. ſ. [acception, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received ſenſe of a word; the meaning. Not in uſe.

That this hath been eſteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I ſhall teſtify by one evidence, which gave me the firſt hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals.

ACCE'SS. n. ſ. [In ſome of its ſenſes, it ſeems derived from acceſſus; in others, from acceſſio, Lat. acces, Fr.] 1. The way by which any thing may be approached. 2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men. 3. Encreaſe, enlargement, addition. 4. It is ſometimes uſed, after the French, to ſignify the returns or fits of a diſtemper; but this ſenſe ſeems yet ſcarcely received into our language.

(1.) The acceſs of the town was only by a neck of land. Bacon.

There remained very advantageous acceſſes for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very ſlender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no aſſurance that repentance would be admitted for ſin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here th' acceſs a gloomy grove defends;
And here th' unnavigable lake extends,
O'er whoſe unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird preſumes to ſteer his airy flight. Dryd. Æneid. vi.

(2.) When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are deny'd acceſs unto his perſon,
Ev'n by thoſe men that moſt have done us wrong. Shakeſp.

They go commiſſion'd to require a peace
And carry preſents to procure acceſs. Dryd. Æn. vii. l. 209.

—— He grants what they beſought;
Inſtructed, that to God is no acceſs
Without Mediator, whoſe high office now
Moſes in figure bears. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xii. l. 239.

(3.) The gold was accumulated, and ſtore treaſure, for the moſt part; but the ſilver is ſtill growing. Beſides, infinite is the acceſs of territory and empire by the ſame enterprize. Bacon.

—— Nor think ſuperfluous their aid;
I, from the influence of thy looks, receive
Acceſs in every virtue; in thy ſight
More wiſe, more watchful, ſtronger. Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may ſeem an acceſs in religion, and ſuch as cannot at all conſiſt with atheiſm, yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the ſame; for unity, is the inſeparable and eſſential attribute of Deity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

—————— The reputation
Of virtuous actions paſt, if not kept up
With an acceſs, and freſh ſupply, of new ones,
Is loſt and ſoon forgotten. Denham's Sophy.

(4.) For as relapſes make diſeaſes
More deſperate than their firſt acceſſes. Hudibras.

A'CCESSARINESS. n. ſ. [from acceſſary.] The ſtate of being acceſſary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative acceſſarineſs to the miſchiefs. Decay of Piety.

A'CCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it ſeems, of the word acceſſory, which ſee; but now more commonly uſed than the proper word.] That which, without being the chief conſtituent of a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general ſenſe.

As for thoſe things that are acceſſary hereunto, thoſe things that ſo belong to the way of ſalvation, &c. Hooker, b. iii. § 3.

He had taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehenſion or imagination, that it would ever make him acceſſary to rebellion. Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCE'SSIBLE. adj. [acceſſibilis, Lat. acceſſible, Fr.] That which may be approached; that which we may reach or arrive at. It is applied both to perſons and things, with the particle to.

Some lie more open to our ſenſes and daily obſervation; others are more occult and hidden, and though acceſſible, in ſome meaſure, to our ſenſes, yet not without great ſearch and ſcrutiny, or ſome happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Thoſe things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been rackt and tortured to diſcover themſelves, while the plainer and more acceſſible truths, as if deſpicable while eaſy, are clouded and obſcured. Decay of Piety.

As an iſland, we are acceſſible on every ſide, and expoſed to perpetual invaſions; againſt which it is impoſſible to fortify ourſelves ſufficiently, without a power at ſea. Addiſon's Freeholder.

In converſation, the tempers of men are open and acceſſible, their attention is awake, and their minds diſpoſed to receive the ſtrongeſt impreſſions; and what is ſpoken is generally more affecting, and more appoſite to particular occaſions. Rogers.

ACCE'SSION. n. ſ. [acceſſio, Lat. acceſſion, Fr.] 1. Encreaſe by ſomething added, enlargement, augmentation. 2. The act of coming to, or joining one's ſelf to; as, acceſſion to a confederacy. 3. The act of arriving at; as, the king's acceſſion to the throne.

(1.) Nor could all the king's bounties, nor his own large acceſſions, raiſe a fortune to his heir; but after vaſt ſums of money, and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

There would not have been found the difference here ſet down betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force ſhould have been according to the theory, but that the included inch of air received ſome [illegible] acceſſion during the trial. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wiſeſt among the nobles [illegible] to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore knowing what an acceſſion thereof would accrue to them, by ſuch an addition of property, uſed all means to prevent it. Swift.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence are the proper diſcharge of ſuch over-proportioned acceſſions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them. Rogers's Sermons.

(2.) Beſide, what wiſe objections he prepares
Againſt my late acceſſion to the wars?
Does not the fool perceive his argument
Is with more force againſt Achilles bent? Dryden's Fables.

A'CCESSORILY. adv. [from acceſſory.] In the manner of an acceſſory.

A'CCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, ſo as to encreaſe it; additional.

In this kind there is not the leaſt action, but it doth ſomewhat make to the acceſſory augmentation of our bliſs. Hooker.

A'CCESSORY. n. ſ. [acceſſorius, Lat. acceſſoire, Fr. This word, which had anciently a general ſignification, is now almoſt confined to forms of law.] 1. Applied to perſons. 2 Applied to things.

(1.) A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be acceſſory to the offence of another, after two ſorts, by the common law, or by ſtatute: and, by the common law, two ways alſo; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviſeth another to commit a felony, and is not preſent at the execution thereof; for his preſence makes him alſo a principal; wherefore there cannot be an acceſſory before the fact in manſlaughter; becauſe manſlaughter is ſudden and not prepenſed. Acceſſory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Acceſſory by ſtatute, is he that abets, counſels, or hides any man committing, or having committed an offence made felony by ſtatute. Cowel.

By the common law, the acceſſories cannot be proceeded againſt, till the principal has received his trial. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

But pauſe, my ſoul! and ſtudy, ere thou fall
On accidental joys, th' eſſential.
Still before acceſſories do abide
A trial, muſt the principal be try'd. Donne.
——— Now were all transform'd
Alike, to ſerpents all, as acceſſories
To his bold riot. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. x. l. 520.

(2.) An acceſſory is ſaid to be that which does accede unto ſome principal fact or thing in law; and, as ſuch, generally ſpeaking, follows the reaſon and nature of its principal. Ayliffe.

A'CCIDENCE. n. ſ. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.] The little book containing the firſt rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of ſpeech.

I do confeſs I do want eloquence,
And never yet did learn mine accidence. Taylor the Water-poet.

ACCIDENT. n. ſ. [accidens, Lat.] 1. The property or quality of any being, which may be ſeparated from it, at leaſt in thought. 2. In grammar, the property of a word. 3. That which happens unforeſeen; caſualty, chance.

(1.) If ſhe were but the body's accident,
And her ſole being did in it ſubſiſt,
As white in ſnow, ſhe might herſelf abſent,
And in the body's ſubſtance not be miſs'd. Sir John Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is ſuch a mode as is not neceſſary to the being of a thing; for the ſubject may be without it, and yet remain of the ſame nature that it was before; or it is that mode which may be ſeparated or aboliſhed from its ſubject. Watts's Logick.

(2.) The learning of a language is nothing elſe but the informing of ourſelves, what compoſures of letters are, by conſent and inſtitution, to ſignify ſuch certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Holder's Elements of Speech.

(3.) General laws are like general rules in phyſick, according whereunto, as no wiſe man will deſire himſelf to be cured, if there be joined with his diſeaſe ſome ſpecial accident, in regard whereof that whereby others in the ſame infirmity, but without the like accident, recover health, would be, to him, either hurtful, or, at the leaſt, unprofitable. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common field and paſture with the land of Eden. Raleigh's Hiſt. World.

——— Our joy is turn'd
Into perplexity, and new amaze;
For whither is he gone? What accident
Hath rapt him from us? Paradiſe Regained.
And trivial accidents ſhall be forborn,
That others may have time to take their turn. Dryd. Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an inſtrument of it (as the logicians ſpeak) by accident. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ACCIDE'NTAL. n. ſ. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property noneſſential.

Conceive, as much as you can, of the eſſentials of any ſubject, before you conſider its accidentals. Watts's Logick.

ACCIDE'NTAL. adj. [from accident.] 1. Having the quality of an accident, noneſſential; uſed with the particle to, before that in which the accident inheres. 2. Caſual, fortuitous, happening by chance. 3. In the following paſſage it ſeems to ſignify adventitious.

(1.) A diſtinction is to be made between what pleaſes naturally in itſelf, and what pleaſes upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumſtances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the laſt Age.

This is accidental to a ſtate of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotſon.

(2.) Thy ſin's not accidental, but a trade.
Shakeſpeare's Meaſure for Meaſure.
——— So ſhall you hear
Of accidental judgments, caſual ſlaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cauſe.
Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Look upon things of the moſt accidental and mutable nature; accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance; yet God's preſcience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us. South's Sermons.

(3.) Ay, ſuch a miniſter as wind to fire,
That adds an accidental fierceneſs to
Its natural fury. Denham's Sophy.

ACCIDE'NTALLY. adv. [from accidental.] 1. After an accidental manner; noneſſentially. 2. Caſually, fortuitouſly.

(1.) Other points no leſs concern the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenſ. St. of Ir.

I conclude choler accidentally bitter, and acrimonious, but not in itſelf. Harvey on Conſumptions.

(2.) Although virtuous men do ſometimes accidentally make their way to preferment; yet the world is ſo corrupted, that no man can reaſonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ACCIDE'NTALNESS. n. ſ. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental. Dict.

ACCI'PIENT. n. ſ. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps ſometimes uſed for recipient. Dict.

Thee only extoll'd. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iii. l. 397.
The herald ends; the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims, and vaſt applauſe, is rent. Dryd. Fables.

ACCLAMA'TION. n. ſ. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applauſe; ſuch as thoſe with which a victorious army ſalutes the general.

It hath been the cuſtom of Chriſtian men, in token of the greater reverence, to ſtand, to utter certain words of acclamation, and, at the name of Jeſus, to bow. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

——— Gladly then he mix'd
Among thoſe friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd
With joy, and acclamations loud, that one
That, of ſo many myriads fall'n, yet one
Return'd not loſt. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words, and ſo fine a thing does it ſeem to ſome, to be ruined plauſibly, and to be uſhered to their deſtruction with panegyrick and acclamation. South.

ACCLI'VITY. n. ſ. [from acclivus, Lat.] The ſteepneſs or ſlope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the aſcent of a hill is the acclivity, the deſcent is the declivity. Quincy.

The men, leaving their wives and younger children below, do, not without ſome difficulty, clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheeſe, and do all the dairy-work. Ray on the Creation.

ACCLI'VOUS. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Riſing with a ſlope.

(1.) When lots are ſhuffled together in a lap, urn, or pitcher; or if a man blindfold caſts a die, what reaſon in the world can he have to preſume, that he ſhall draw a white ſtone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a ſiſe. South.

(2.) He will not bate an ace of abſolute certainty; but however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it muſt go for an indiſputable truth. Governm. of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world ſhall not bribe me to it. Dryd. Spaniſh Fryar.

ACE'PHALOUS. adj. [ἀκέφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.

ACE'RB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughneſs, as moſt fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY. n. ſ. [acerbitas, Lat.] 1. A rough ſour taſte. 2. Applied to men, ſharpneſs of temper; ſeverity.

(1. 2.) True it is, that the talents for criticiſm, namely, ſmartneſs, quick cenſure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, ſeem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pope.

To ACE'RVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

ACERVA'TION. n. ſ. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.

ACE'SCENT. adj. [aceſcent, Lat.] That which has a tendency to ſourneſs or acidity.

The ſame perſons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a ſufficient quantity of aceſcents; as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors. Arb. on Alim.

ACETO'SE. adj. That which has in it any thing ſour. Dict.

ACETO'SITY. n. ſ. [from acetoſe.] The ſtate of being acetoſe, or of containing ſourneſs. Dict.

ACE'TOUS. adj. [From acetum, vinegar, Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar, ſour.

Raiſins, which conſiſt chiefly of the juice of grapes, inſpiſſated in the ſkins or huſks by the avolation of the ſuperfluous moiſture through their pores, being diſtilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous ſpirit. Boyle.

ACHE. n. ſ. [ace, Sax. ἄχος, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one ſyllable; the primitive manner being preſerved chiefly in poetry, for the ſake of the meaſure.] A continued pain. See AKE.

——I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beaſts ſhall tremble at thy din. Shakeſp.

A coming ſhow'r your ſhooting corns preſage,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage. Swift.

To ACHE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our ſenſes are dulled and ſpent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly diſcerned object. Glanville.

To ACHI'EVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.] 1. To perform, to finiſh a deſign proſperouſly. 2. To gain, to obtain.

(1.) Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with ſure ſucceſs:
The greater part perform'd achieve the leſs. Dryden.

(2.) Experience is by induſtry achiev'd,
And perfected by the ſwift courſe of time. Shakeſ.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I periſh, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modeſt girl. Shakeſp.

Thou haſt achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
Within hell-gates till now. Milton.

Show all the ſpoils by valiant kings achiev'd,
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

An ACHI'EVER. n. ſ. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itſelf, when the achiever brings home full numbers. Shak. Much ado about Nothing.

An ACHI'EVEMENT. n. ſ. [achevement, Fr.] 1. The performance of an action. 2. The eſcutcheon, or enſigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

(1.) From every coaſt that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements ſtill purſue. Fair. Qu.

(2.) Then ſhall the war, and ſtern debate, and ſtrife
Immortal, be the bus'neſs of my life;
And in thy fane, the duſty ſpoils among,
High on the burniſh'd roof my banner ſhall be hung;
Rank'd with my champion's bucklers, and below,
With arms revers'd, th' achievements of the foe. Dryd.

Achievement, in the firſt ſenſe, is derived from achieve, as it ſignifies to perform; in the ſecond, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

A'CHING. n. ſ. [from ache.] Pain; uneaſineſs.

When old age comes to wait upon a great and worſhipful ſinner, it comes attended with many painful girds and achings, called the gout. South.

A'CHOR. n. ſ. [achor, Lat. ἀχὼρ, Gr. furfur.]

A ſpecies of the herpes; it appears with a cruſty ſcab, which cauſes an itching on the ſurface of the head, occaſioned by a ſalt ſharp ſerum oozing through the ſkin. Quincy.

A'CID adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, ſharp

Wild trees laſt longer than garden trees; and in the ſame kind, thoſe whoſe fruit is acid, more than thoſe whoſe fruit is ſweet. Bac. Nat. Hiſt.

Acid, or ſour, proceeds from a ſalt of the ſame nature, without mixture of oil; in auſtere taſtes the oily parts have not diſentangled themſelves from the ſalts and earthy parts? ſuch is the taſte of unripe fruits. Arb. on Alim.

Liquors and ſubſtances are called acids, which being compoſed of pointed particles, affect the taſte in a ſharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with ſyrup of violets, when it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that ſyrup green. Quincy.

ACI'DITY. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taſte; ſharpneſs; ſourneſs.

Fiſhes, by the help of a diſſolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meat, ſkin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor; and yet this liquor manifeſts nothing of acidity to the taſte. Ray.

When the taſte of the mouth is bitter, it is a ſign of a redundance of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the caſe of acidity or ſourneſs. Arb. on Alim.

A'CIDNESS. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACI'DULÆ. n. ſ. [that is, aquæ acidulæ.] Medicinal ſprings impregnated with ſharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum-ſprings are. Quincy.

The acidulæ, or medicinal ſprings, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than uſual; and even the ordinary ſprings, which were before clear, freſh and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with ſulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake laſts. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

To ACI'DULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a ſlight degree.

A diet of freſh unſalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient ſubſtances, ſour milk, butter, and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it ſeems, between the Latin and Engliſh, from agnoſco, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon, cnaƿan, to know.] 1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or perſon in a particular character. 2. To confeſs; as a fault. 3. To own; as, a benefit; ſometimes with the particle to before the perſon conferring the benefit.

(1.) My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jeſſica,
In place of lord Baſſanio and myſelf. Shakeſpeare.

None that acknowledge God, or providence,
Their ſouls eternity did ever doubt. Davies.

(2.) For I acknowledge my tranſgreſſions; and my ſin is ever before me. Pſalm li. 3.

(3.) ——————— His ſpirit
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Milton.

In the firſt place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the aſſiſtance he has given me in the beginning, and the proſecution of my preſent ſtudies. Dryden.

ACKNO'WLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received. A Galliciſm. reconnoiſſant.

He has ſhewn his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compaſſionate and hard-hearted; but, at the bottom, fickle and ſelf-intereſted. Dryden's Virgil.

ACKNO'WLEDGMENT. n. ſ. [from acknowledge.] 1. Conceſſion of any character in another; as, exiſtence, ſuperiority. 2. Conceſſion of the truth of any poſition. 3. Confeſſion of a fault. 4. Confeſſion of a benefit received; gratitude. 5. Act of atteſtation to any conceſſion; ſuch as homage. 6. Something given or done in confeſſion of a benefit received.

(1.) The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a neceſſary connexion and chain of cauſes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; becauſe it carries every thinking man to an original of every ſucceſſive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

(2.) Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the Chriſtian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hooker.

(5.) There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never eſtabliſhed, nor any acknowledgment of ſubjection made. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

(6.) The ſecond is an acknowledgment to his majeſty for the leave of fiſhing upon his coaſts; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our ſide, and cuſtom on theirs, not determined or extinguiſhed by any treaty between us, it may with juſtice be inſiſted on. Temple's Miſcellanies.

A'CME. n. ſ. [ἄκμη, Gr.] The height of any thing; more eſpecially uſed to denote the height of a diſtemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arché, the beginning or firſt attack. 2. Anabaſis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declenſion of the diſtemper. Quincy.

ACO'LOTHIST. n. ſ. [ἀκολουθέω, Gr.] One of the loweſt order in the Romiſh church, whoſe office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

It is duty, according to the papal law, when the biſhop ſings maſs, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to ſee that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the acolothiſt, to keep the ſacred veſſels. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'COLYTE. n. ſ. The ſame with ACOLOTHIST.

A'CONITE. n. ſ. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfſbane, but commonly uſed in poetical language for poiſon in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nouriſhes the lion's angry ſeed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, refus'd. Dryden.

Deſpair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others, love,
That poiſon never yet withſtood,
Does nouriſh mine, and turns to blood. Granville.

A'CORN. n. ſ. [Æceꞃn, Sax. from ac, an oak, and coꞃn, corn or grain; that is, the grain or fruit of the oak.] The ſeed or fruit borne by the oak.

Errours, ſuch as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings, and on ſtrawberries they fed;
Cornals and bramble-berries gave the reſt,
And falling acorns furniſh'd out a feaſt. Dryden's Ovid.

He that is nouriſhed by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himſelf. Locke.

A'CORNED. adj. [from acorn.] Stored with acorns.

Like a full acorn'd boar. Shakeſpeare.

ACO'USTICKS. n. ſ. [Ἀκουστικὰ, of ἀκούω, Gr. to hear.] 1. The doctrine or theory of ſounds. 2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUA'INT. v. a. [accointer, Fr.] 1. To make familiar with; applied either to perſons or things. It has with before the object. 2. To inform. With is more in uſe before the object than of.

(1.) We that acquaint ourſelves with ev'ry zone,
And paſs the tropicks, and behold each pole;
When we come home, are to ourſelves unknown,
And unacquainted ſtill with our own ſoul. Davies.

There with thee, new welcome ſaint,
Like fortunes may her ſoul acquaint. Milton.

Before a man can ſpeak on any ſubject, it is neceſſary to be acquainted with it. Locke on Education.

Acquaint yourſelves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domeſtic and national; things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourſelves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own ſpirits. Watts's Logick.

(2.) But for ſome other reaſons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this buſineſs. Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

A friend in the country acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought words and phraſes, which were never before in thoſe parts. Tatler.

ACQUA'INTANCE. n ſ. [accointance, Fr.] 1. The ſtate of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied as well to perſons as things, with the particle with. 2. Familiar knowledge, ſimply without a prepoſition. 3. A ſlight or initial knowledge, ſhort of friendſhip, as applied to perſons. 4. The perſon with whom we are acquainted; him of whom we have ſome knowledge, without the intimacy of friendſhip. In this ſenſe, the plural is, in ſome authours, acquaintance, in others acquaintances.

(1.) Nor was his acquaintance leſs with the famous poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man leſſons upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we ſeldom hear of a celebrated perſon, without a catalogue of ſome notorious weakneſſes and infirmities. Addiſon.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God: let us ſtudy to reſemble him. We muſt be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury.

(2.) ——— Brave ſoldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from my tongue,
Should 'ſcape the true acquaintance of mine ear. Shakeſp.

This keeps the underſtanding long in converſe with an object, and long converſe brings acquaintance. South.

In what manner he lived with thoſe who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to ſay. Atterbury.

(3.) I hope I am pretty near ſeeing you, and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance; becauſe if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long noviciate of acquaintance ſhould precede the vows of friendſhip. Bolingbroke.

(4.) But ſhe, all vŏw'd unto the red-croſs knight,
His wandering peril cloſely did lament,
Nay in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dear heart with anguiſh did torment. Fairy Queen.

That young men travel under ſome tutor, I allow well, ſo that he be ſuch a one that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to ſeek, what exerciſes or diſcipline the place yieldeth. Bacon.

This, my lord, has juſtly acquired you as many friends, as there are perſons who have the honour to be known to you; mere acquaintance you have none, you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have converſed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

We ſee he is aſhamed of his neareſt acquaintances.
Boyle againſt Bentley.

ACQUA'INTED. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakeſpeare.

ACQUE'ST. n. ſ. [acqueſt, Fr. from acquerir, written by ſome acquiſt, with a view to the word acquire, or acquiſita.] Attachment, acquiſition; the thing gained.

New acqueſts are more burden than ſtrength. Bacon.

Mud, repoſed near the oſtea of rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the ſea, and preſerving theſe ſhells as trophies and ſigns of his new acqueſts and encroachments. Woodward.

To ACQUIE'SCE. v. n. [acquieſcer, Fr. acquieſcere, Lat.] To reſt in, or remain ſatisfied with, without oppoſition or diſcontent. It has in before the object.

Others will, upon account of the receivedneſs of the propoſed opinion, think it rather worthy to be examined than acquieſced in. Boyle.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wiſhing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, laſtly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can paſs before God for a man's willing of ſuch things; and conſequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquieſce in an airy ungrounded perſuaſion, that they will thoſe things which they really not will, they fall thereby into a groſs and fatal deluſion. South.

He hath employed his tranſcendent wiſdom and power, that by theſe he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they ultimately acquieſce. Grew.

ACQUIE'SCENCE. n. ſ. [from acquieſce.] 1. A ſilent appearance of content, diſtinguiſhed on one ſide from avowed conſent, on the other from oppoſition. 2. Satisfaction, reſt, content. 3. Submiſſion; confidence.

(1.) Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought moſt averſe from it, there appeared any ſign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquieſcence in all the biſhops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

(2.) Many indeed have given over their purſuits after fame, either from diſappointment, or from experience of the little pleaſure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldneſs of old age; but ſeldom from a full ſatisfaction and acquieſcence in their preſent enjoyments of it. Addiſon.

(3.) The greateſt part of the world take up their perſuaſions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquieſcence in the word of thoſe, who ſhall repreſent things to them under theſe characters. South.

ACQUI'RABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Thoſe rational inſtincts, the connate principles engraven in the human ſoul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational conſequence and argumentation, yet ſeem to be inſcribed in the very craſis and texture of the ſoul, antecedent to any acquiſition by induſtry or the exerciſe of the diſcurſive faculty in man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation and volition, and ſenſation, are neither inherent in matter as ſuch, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it neceſſarily follows, that they proceed from ſome cogitative ſubſtance, ſome incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call ſpirit and ſoul. Bentley.

To ACQUI'RE. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquiro, Lat.] 1. To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or tranſmitted by inheritance. 2. To come to; to attain.

(1.) Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, while he, we ſerve, 's away.
Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

(2.) Motion cannot be perceived without the perception of its terms, viz. the parts of ſpace which it immediately left, and and thoſe which it next acquires. Glanville's Scepſis.

ACQUI'RED particip. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's ſelf, in oppoſition to thoſe things which are beſtowed by nature.

We are ſeldom at eaſe, and free enough from the ſolicitation of our natural or adopted deſires; but a conſtant ſucceſſion of uneaſineſſes, out of that ſtock, which natural wants, or acquired habits have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

An ACQUI'RER. n. ſ. [from acquire.] The perſon that acquires; a gainer.

An ACQUI'REMENT. n. ſ. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly uſed in oppoſition to the gifts of nature.

Theſe his acquirements, by induſtry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature.
Hayward on Edward VI.

By a content and acquieſcence in every ſpecies of truth, we embrace the ſhadow thereof; or ſo much as may palliate its juſt and ſubſtantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of a taſte. The faculty muſt, in ſome degree, be born with us.
Addiſon.

ACQUISI'TION. n. ſ. [acquiſitio, Lat.] 1. The act of acquiring or gaining. 2. The thing gained; acquirement.

(1.) Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compaſs the poſſeſſion of theſe things, is by his own induſtrious acquiſition of them. South.

(2.) ——— Great Sir, all acquiſition
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before
Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A ſtate can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable criſis, than when ſome prince lies hovering like a vulture to diſmember its dying carcaſe; by which means it becomes only an acquiſition to ſome mighty monarchy, without hopes of a reſurrection. Swift.

ACQUI'SITIVE. adj. [acquiſitivus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained.

He died not in his acquiſitive but in his native ſoil; nature herſelf, as it were, claiming a final intereſt in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

ACQUI'ST. n. ſ. [See ACQUEST.] Acquirement; attainment; gain. Not in uſe.

His ſervant he with new acquiſt
Of true experience from this great event,
With peace and conſolation hath diſmiſt. Milton.

To ACQUI'T. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See QUIT.] 1. To ſet free. 2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to abſolve; oppoſed to condemn, either ſimply with an accuſative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime. 3. To clear from any obligation. 4. In a ſimilar ſenſe, it is ſaid, The man hath acquitted himſelf well, that is, he diſcharged his duty.

(1.) Ne do I wiſh (for wiſhing were but vain)
To be acquit from my continual ſmart;
But joy her thrall for ever to remain,
And yield for pledge my poor captivated heart. Spenſer.

(2.) If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the ſuffrage of the moſt and beſt he is already acquitted, and, by the ſentence of ſome, condemned. Dryden.

He that judges, without informing himſelf to the utmoſt that he is capable, cannot acquit himſelf of judging amiſs. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majeſty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

(3.) Steady to my principles, and not diſpirited with my afflictions, I have, by the bleſſing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in ſome meaſure, acquitted myſelf of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

ACQUI'TMENT. n. ſ. [from acquit.] The ſtate of being acquitted; or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or diſcharge of a man upon ſome precedent accuſation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cauſe had thereupon. South.

ACQUI'TTAL. n. ſ. in law, is a deliverance and ſetting free from the ſuſpicion or guiltineſs of an offence. Cowel.

The conſtant deſign of both theſe orators, was to drive ſome one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accuſed perſon. Swift.

To ACQUI'TTANCE. v. n. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in preſent uſe.

But if black ſcandal and foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the ſequel of your impoſition,
Your mere enforcement ſhall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and ſtains thereof. Shakeſp.

ACQUI'TTANCE. n. ſ. [from acquit.] 1. The act of diſcharging from a debt. 2. A writing teſtifying the receipt of a debt.

(1.) ——— But ſoon ſhall find
Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
Juſtice ſhall not return, as beauty, ſcorn'd. Milton.

(2.) ——— You can produce acquittances
For ſuch a ſum, from ſpecial officers
Of Charles his father. Shakeſp. Love's Lab. Loſt.

They quickly pay their debt, and then
Take no acquittances, but pay again. Donne.

The ſame man bought and ſold to himſelf, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot.

A'CRE. n. ſ. [Æcꞃe, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thouſand eight hundred and forty ſquare yards. Dict.

Search ev'ry acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. Shakeſp. King Lear.

A'CRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taſte; bitter, ſo as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taſte.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the ſharp particles of the firſt, being involved in a greater quantity of oil than thoſe of the laſt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACRIMO'NIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; ſharp; corroſive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itſelf, then whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, muſt be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Conſumptions.

A'CRIMONY. n. ſ. [acrimonia, Lat.] 1. Sharpneſs, corroſiveneſs. 2. Sharpneſs of temper, ſeverity, bitterneſs of thought or language.

(1.) There be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, ſow-thiſtles, ſpurge. The cauſe may be an inception of putrefaction: for thoſe milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they ſhould be lenitive. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The chymiſts define ſalt, from ſome of its properties, to be a body fuſible in the fire, congealable again by cold into brittle glebes or chryſtals, ſoluble in water, ſo as to diſappear, not malleable, and having ſomething in it which affects the organs of taſte with a ſenſation of acrimony or ſharpneſs. Arbuthnot.

(2.) John the Baptiſt ſet himſelf, with much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this ſenſeleſs arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

A'CRITUDE. n. ſ. [from acrid.] An acrid taſte; a biting heat on the palate.

In green vitriol, with its aſtringent and ſweeteſt taſtes, is joined ſome acritude. Grew's Muſeum.

(1.) ——— A lower place, not well,
May make too great an act:
Better to leave undone than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The conſcious wretch muſt all his acts reveal;
Loth to confeſs, unable to conceal;
From the firſt moment of his vital breath,
To his laſt hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

(2.) ——— I will try the forces
Of theſe thy compounds on ſuch creatures as
We count not worth the hanging; but none human;
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act; and by them gather
Their ſeveral virtues and effects. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

(3.) 'Tis ſo much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many, as the ſun is always carrying his light to ſome part or other of the world. Dryden's Fables.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will and act, his word and work the ſame. Prior.

(4.) ———This act perſuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her,
Is practice only. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

(5.) The ſeeds of herbs and plants at the firſt are not in act, but in poſſibility that which they afterwards grow to be. Hooker.

God alone excepted, who actually and everlaſtingly is whatſoever he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which now he is not; all other things beſides are ſomewhat in poſſibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker.

(1.) O noble Engliſh that could entertain
With half their forces the full power of France;
And let another half ſtand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakeſp. Henry V.

(2.) ——— This action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination inſtead of a good action, where that action may be done; nay, ſo much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not ſeconded by a good action, the want of that action is made ſo much the more criminal and inexcuſable. South.

(3.) It is better therefore, that the earth ſhould move about its own center, and make thoſe uſeful viciſſitudes of night and day, than expoſe always the ſame ſide to the action of the ſun. Bentley.

He has ſettled laws, and laid down rules, conformable to which natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne.

(4.) This action ſhould have three qualifications. Firſt, it ſhould be but one action; ſecondly, it ſhould be an entire action; and, thirdly, it ſhould be a great action. Addiſon.

(5.) — He that ſpeaks doth gripe the hearer's wriſt,
While he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakeſp. King John.

Our orators are obſerved to make uſe of leſs geſture or action than thoſe of other countries. Addiſon.

(6.) Actions are perſonal, real, and mixt: action perſonal belongs to a man againſt another, by reaſon of any contract, offence, or cauſe, of like force with a contract or offence made or done by him or ſome other, for whoſe fact he is to anſwer. Action real is given to any man againſt another, that poſſeſſes the thing required or ſued for in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt is that which lies as well againſt or for the thing which we ſeek, as againſt the perſon that hath it; called mixt, becauſe it hath a mixt reſpect both to the thing and to the perſon.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us; as, a ſum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that which aims at ſome penalty or puniſhment in the party ſued, be it corporal or pecuniary: as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniouſly ſlain ſhall purſue the law againſt the murderer. Action mixt is that which ſeeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty alſo for the unjuſt detaining of the ſame.

Action upon the caſe, is an action given for redreſs of wrongs done without force againſt any man, by law not ſpecially provided for.

Action upon the ſtatute, is an action brought againſt a man upon breach of a ſtatute. Cowell.

Actita'tion. n. ſ. [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent. Dict.

To A'ctivate. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps uſed only by the authour alleged.

As ſnow and ice, eſpecially being holpen, and their cold activated by nitre or ſalt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours; ſo it may be, it will turn wood or ſtiff clay into ſtone, in longer time. Bacon.

A'ctive. adj. [activus, Lat.] 1. That which has the power or quality of acting. 2. That which acts, oppoſed to paſſive, or that which ſuffers. 3. Buſy, engaged in action; oppoſed to idle or ſedentary, or any ſtate of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers. 4. Practical; not merely theoretical. 5. Nimble; agile; quick. 6. In grammar.

(1.) Theſe particles have not only a vis inertiæ, accompanied with ſuch paſſive laws of motion, as naturally reſult from that force, but alſo they are moved by certain active principles, ſuch as is that of gravity, and that which cauſes fermentation, and the coheſion of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

(2.) — When an even flame two hearts did touch,
His office was indulgently to fit
Actives to paſſives, correſpondency
Only his ſubject was. Donne.

If you think that by multiplying the additaments in the ſame proportion, that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the paſſive will add more reſiſtance than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon.

(3.) 'Tis virtuous action that much praiſe bring forth,
Without which, ſlow advice is little worth;
Yet they who give good counſel, praiſe deſerve,
Though in the active part they cannot ſerve. Denh.

(4.) The world hath had in theſe men freſh experience, how dangerous ſuch active errors are. Hooker.

(5.) Some bend the ſtubborn bow for victory:
And ſome with darts their active ſinews try. Dryden.

(6.) A verb active is that which ſignifies action, as I teach. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

A'ctively. adv. [from active.] In an active manner; buſily; nimbly. In an active ſignification; as, the word is uſed actively.

A'ctiveness. n. ſ. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickneſs; nimbleneſs. This is a word more rarely uſed than activity.

What ſtrange agility and activeneſs do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exerciſe! Wilkins's Mathemath. Magick.

Acti'vity. n. ſ. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or perſons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaſeth the activity of cold. Bacon.

Our adverſary will not be idle, though we are; he watches every turn of our ſoul, and incident of our life; and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'ctor. n. ſ. [actor, Lat.] 1. He that acts, or performs any thing. 2. He that perſonates a character; a ſtage-player.

(1.) The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for ſucceſſion, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He, who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himſelf but a tranſcript of Nero in his mind, and would gladly enough ſee ſuch pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himſelf. South.

(2.) ——— Would you have
Such an Herculean actor in the ſcene,
And not this hydra? They muſt ſweat no leſs
To fit their properties, than t'expreſs their parts. Ben. Johnſ.

When a good actor doth his part preſent,
In every act he our attention draws,
That at the laſt he may find juſt applauſe. Denham.

Theſe falſe beauties of the ſtage are no more laſting than a rain-bow; when the actor ceaſes to ſhine upon them, they vaniſh in a twinkling. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

A'ctress. n. ſ. [actrice, Fr.] 1. She that performs any thing. 2. A woman that plays on the ſtage.

(1.) Virgil has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actreſs in the Æneid; but the part ſhe acts is very ſhort, and none of the moſt admired circumſtances of that divine work. Addiſon.

——We ſprights have juſt ſuch natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures;
And therefore I that was an actreſs here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryden.

A'ctual. adj. [actuel, Fr.] 1. That which compriſes action. 2. Really in act; not merely potential. 3. In act; not purely in ſpeculation.

(2.) ——— Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton.

(3.) For he that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then what muſt he expect, that ſtill proceeds
To finiſh ſin, and work up thoughts to deeds? Dryd.

Actua'lity. n. ſ. [from actual.] The ſtate of being actual.

The actuality of theſe ſpiritual qualities is thus impriſoned, though their potentiality be not quite deſtroyed; and thus a craſs, extended, impenetrable, paſſive, diviſible, unintelligent ſubſtance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyne.

A'ctually. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really.

All mankind ackowledge themſelves able and ſufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the chronicles, and you will think you were reading a hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael or Judah, where the hiſtorians were actually inſpired, and where, by a particular ſcheme of providence, the kings were diſtinguiſhed by judgments or bleſſings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worſhip of the true God. Addiſon.

Though our temporal proſpects ſhould be full of danger, or though the days of ſorrow ſhould actually overtake us, yet ſtill we muſt repoſe ourſelves on God. Rogers.

A'ctualness. n. ſ. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'ctuary. n. ſ. [actuarius, Lat.] The regiſter who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppoſe the judge ſhould ſay, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the cuſtody of them with himſelf: certainly, in this caſe, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Ayliffe.

A'ctuate. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the paſſive reception of the will, like form cloſing with matter, grew actuate into a third and diſtinct perfection of practice. South.

To A'CTUATE. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate or encreaſe the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living ſpirit, and ſeems, by ſome vital irradiation, to be actuated into this luſtre. Brown's Vulg. Er.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the ſubduing of every reigning ſin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greateſt abilities are moſt fired with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the leaſt actuated by it. Addiſon.

Our paſſions are the ſprings which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers.

Actuo'se. adj. [from act.] That which hath ſtrong powers of action: a word little uſed.

To A'cuate. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To ſharpen, to invigorate with any powers of ſharpneſs.

Immoderate feeding upon powdered beef, pickled meats, and debauching with ſtrong wines, do inflame and acuate the blood, whereby it is capacitated to corrode the lungs. Harvey on Conſumptions.

Acu'leate. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That which has a point or ſting; prickly; that which terminates in a ſharp point.

ACUMEN. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſharp point; figuratively, quickneſs of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Ariſtarchus in common converſation, to ſignify genius or natural acumen. Pope.

Acu'minated. particip. adj. Ending in a point; ſharp-pointed.

This is not accuminated and pointed, as in the reſt, but ſeemeth, as it were, cut off. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a ſmall round acuminated tubercle, which hath not much pain, unleſs touched or rubbed, or exaſperated by topicks. Wiſeman.

ACU'TE. adj. [acutus, Lat.] 1. Sharp, ending in a point; oppoſed to obtuſe or blunt. 2. In a figurative ſenſe applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; oppoſed to dull or ſtupid. 3. A'dage. n. ſ. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects, are confident pretenders to certainty, as if, contrary to the adage, ſcience had no friend but ignorance. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool,
Dar'ſt thou apply that adage of the ſchool;
As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd;
And ſcience is not ſcience till reveal'd? Dryden.

ADA'GIO. n. ſ. [Italian.] A term uſed by muſicians, to mark a ſlow time.

A'DAMANT. n. ſ. [adamas, Lat. from α and δαμάω, Gr. that is inſuperable, infrangible.] 1. A ſtone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardneſs. 2. The diamond. 3. Adamant is taken for the loadſtone.

(1.) So great a fear my name amongſt them ſpread,
That they ſuppos'd I could rend bars of ſteel,
And ſpurn in pieces poſts of adamant. Shakeſpeare.

Satan, with vaſt and haughty ſtrides advanc'd,
Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant and gold. Milton.

——————Eternal Deities,
Who rule the world with abſolute decrees,
And write whatever time ſhall bring to paſs,
With pens of adamant, on plates of braſs. Dryden.

(2.) Hardneſs, wherein ſome ſtones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other ſtones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious ſtones of chymiſts, in imitation, being eaſily detected by an ordinary lapidiſt. Ray on the Creation.

(3.) You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!
But yet you draw not iron; for my heart
Is true as ſteel. Shakeſ.

Let him change his lodging from one part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.

Adamante'an, adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He weaponleſs himſelf,
Made arms ridiculous, uſeleſs the forgery
Of brazen ſhield and ſpear, the hammer'd cuiraſs,
Chalybean temper'd ſteel, and frock of mail

This word occurs perhaps only in this paſſage.

Adama'ntine. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.] 1. Made of adamant. 2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardneſs, indiſſolubility.

In ſunder rend that adamantine chain,
Whoſe golden links, effects and cauſes be,
And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain? Davies.

An eternal ſterility muſt have poſſeſſed the world, where all things had been fixed and faſtened everlaſtingly with the adamantine chains of ſpecific gravity; if the Almighty had not ſpoken and ſaid, Let the earth bring forth graſs, the herb yielding ſeed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after its kind; and it was ſo. Bentley.

In adamantine chains ſhall death be bound,
And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound. Pope.

Tho' adamantine bonds the chief reſtrain,
The dire reſtraint his wiſdom will defeat,
And ſoon reſtore him to his regal ſeat. Pope.

A'dam's-apple. n. ſ. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADA'PT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to ſuit; to proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are ſomewhat dimmiſh grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my ſight. Swift.

It is not enough that nothing offends the ear, but a good poet will adapt the very ſounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of. Pope's Letters.

Adapta'tion. n. ſ. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitneſs of one thing to another.

Some ſpecies there be of middle natures, that is, of bird and beaſt, as batts; yet are their parts ſo ſet together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either, there being a commixtion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulg. Er.

Adheſion may be in part aſcribed, either to ſome elaſtical motion in the preſſed glaſs, or to the exquiſite adaptation of the almoſt numberleſs, though very ſmall, aſperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the ſurfaces do lock in with one another, or are, as it were, claſped together. Boyle.

Ada'ption. n. ſ. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a ſufficient work to ſhew all the neceſſities, the wiſe contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of theſe admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne.

Ada'ptness. n. ſ. [for adaptedneſs, from adapt.]

Some notes are to diſplay the adaptneſs of the ſound to the ſenſe. Dr. Newton.

This word I have found no where elſe.

The name, and all th' addition to a king;
The ſway, revenue, execution,
Beloved ſons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. Shakeſ. K. Lear.

——————From this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all th' applauſe and clamour of the hoſt,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever.
Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

There aroſe new diſputes upon the perſons named by the king, or rather againſt the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

Addi'tional. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and ſet right, it may be kept ſo, without any conſiderable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holder on Time.

The greateſt wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in ſo good an underſtanding, and celebrated one another with ſo much generoſity, that each of them receives an additional luſtre from his cotemporaries. Addiſon.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is ſuppoſed to be powerful; and do, withal, afford us ſeveral other additional proofs, of great force and clearneſs. Atterb.

ADDI'TIONAL. n. ſ. Additament; ſomething added. Not in uſe.

May be ſome little additional may further the incorporation. Bacon.

A'DDITORY. adj. [from add.] That which has the power or quality of adding.

The additory fiction gives to a great man a larger ſhare of reputation than belongs to him, to enable him to ſerve ſome good end or purpoſe. Arbuthn.

A'DDLE. adj. [from aꝺel, a diſeaſe, Sax. according to Skinner and Junius; perhaps from ẏꝺel, idle, barren, unfruitful.] Originally applied to eggs, and ſignifying ſuch as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen; thence transferred to brains that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle,
That carries eggs too freſh or addle;
And ſtill at random, as he goes,
Among the rabble rout beſtows. Hudibras.

After much ſolitarineſs, faſting, or long ſickneſs, their brains were addle, and their bellies as empty of meat as their heads of wit. Burton on Melancholy.

Thus far the poet; but his brains grow addle:
And all the reſt is purely from this noddle. Dryden.

To A'DDLE. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is alſo evidenced in eggs, whereof the ſound ones ſink, and ſuch as are addled ſwim; as do alſo thoſe that are termed hypanemiæ, or wind-eggs. Brown's Vulg. Er.

To A'DDLE. v. n. To grow; to encreaſe. Obſolete.

Where ivy embraceth the tree very ſore,
Kill ivy, elſe tree will addle no more. Tuſſer's Huſb.

Satan, with thoughts inflam'd, of higheſt deſign,
Puts on ſwift wings. Milton.

An adverſary makes a ſtricter ſearch into us, and diſcovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes. Addiſon.

Adve'rsative. adj. [adverſativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes ſome oppoſition or variety; as, in this ſentence: This diamond is orient, but it is rough. But is an adverſative conjunction.

A'DVERSE. adj. [adverſus, Lat.] In proſe it has now the accent on the firſt ſyllable; in verſe it is accented on the firſt by Shakeſpeare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the laſt, by Dryden; on the firſt, by Roſcommon. 1. Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in colliſion. 2. Figuratively, contrary to the wiſh or deſire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is oppoſed to proſperous. 3. Perſonally opponent; the perſon that counteracts another, or conteſts any thing.

(1.) Was I for this nigh wreckt upon the ſea,
And twice, by adverſe winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime. Shakeſp.

As when two polar winds blowing adverſe,
Upon the Cronian ſea together drive
Mountains of ice. Milton.

With adverſe blaſt up-turns them from the South,
Notus and Afer. Milton.

A cloud of ſmoke envelopes either hoſt,
And all at once the combatants are loſt;
Darkling they join adverſe, and ſhock unſeen;
Courſers with courſers juſtling, men with men. Dryden.

(2.) What if he hath decreed, that I ſhall firſt
Be try'd in humble ſtate, and things adverſe;
By tribulations, injuries, inſults,
Contempts, and ſcorns, and ſnares, and violence. Milton.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,
Unhappy men, or adverſe fate,
Sunk deep into the gulfs of an afflicted ſtate. Roſcommon.

(3.) Well ſhe ſaw her father was grown her adverſe party; and yet her fortune ſuch, as ſhe muſt favour her rivals. Sidney.

Adve'rsity. n. ſ. [adverſité, Fr.] Affliction; calamity; that is, oppoſition to our wiſhes. 1. The cauſe of our ſorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this ſenſe it may have a plural. 2. The ſtate of unhappineſs; miſery.

(1.) Let me embrace theſe ſour adverſities,
For wiſe men ſay, it is the wiſeſt courſe. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

(2.) Concerning deliverance itſelf from all adverſity, we uſe not to ſay men are in adverſity, whenſoever they feel any ſmall hindrance of their welfare in this world, but when ſome notable affliction or croſs, ſome great calamity or trouble, befalleth them. Hooker.

Sweet are the uſes of adverſity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Shakeſp.

A remembrance of the good uſe he had made of proſperity, contributed to ſupport his mind under the heavy weight of adverſity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury.

A'dversely. adv. [from adverſe.] In an adverſe manner; oppoſitely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and ſpend my malice in my breath. If the drink you give me touch my palate adverſly, I make a crooked face at it. Shakeſp.

To ADVE'RT. v. n. [adverto, Lat.] To attend to; to regard; to obſerve: with the particle to before the object of regard. We ſometimes ſay, To advert the mind to an object.

The mind of man being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of ſuch an innumerable number of vaſt bodies, will afford matter of admiration. Ray on the Creation.

Now to the univerſal whole advert;
The earth regard as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame more noble worlds abound;
Witneſs, ye glorious orbs, which hang around. Blackmore.

Adve'rtence. n. ſ. [from advert.] Attention to; regard to; conſideration.

Chriſtianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may ſet its foot; allow but a ſober advertence to its propoſals, and it will move the whole world. Decay of Piety.

Adve'rtency. n. ſ. [from advert.] The ſame with advertence. Attention; regard; heedfulneſs.

Too much advertency is not your talent; or elſe you had fled from that text, as from a rock. Swift.

Adve'rtent adj. [from advert.] Attentive; vigilant; heedful.

This requires choice parts, great attention of mind, ſequeſtration from the importunity of ſecular employments, and a long advertent and deliberate connexing of conſequents. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ADVERTI'SE. v. a. [advertir, Fr. It is now ſpoken with the accent upon the laſt ſyllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the ſecond.] 1. To inform another; to give intelligence; with an accuſative of the perſon informed. 2. To inform; to give notice; with of before the ſubject of information. 3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertiſement in the publick prints; as, He advertiſed his loſs.

(1.) ——— The biſhop did require a reſpite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertiſe,
Whether our daughter were legitimate. Shakeſp.

As I by friends am well advertiſed,
Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates are in arms. Shakeſp.

The king was not ſo ſhallow, nor ſo ill advertiſed, as not to perceive the intention of the French king. Bacon.

I hope ye will advertiſe me fairly of what they diſlike. Digby.

(2.) Ferhates, underſtanding that Solyman expected more aſſured advertiſement, unto the other Baſſas declared the death of the emperor; of which they advertiſed Solyman; firming thoſe letters with all their hands and ſeals. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

They were to advertiſe the chief hero of the diſtreſſes of his ſubjects, occaſioned by his abſence. Dryden.

Adverti'sement, or Adve'rtisement. n. ſ. [advertiſſement, Fr.] 1. Inſtruction; admonition. 2. Intelligence; information. 3. Notice of any thing publiſhed in a paper of intelligence.

(1.)—'Tis all mens office to ſpeak patience
To thoſe, that wring under the load of ſorrow;
But no man's virtue nor ſufficiency,
To be ſo moral, when he ſhall endure
The like himſelf: therefore give me no counſel;
My griefs are louder than advertiſement.
Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Cyrus was once minded to have put Crœſus to death, but hearing him report the advertiſement of Solon, he ſpared his life. Abbot's Deſcription of the World.

(2.) Then, as a cunning prince that uſeth ſpies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But if they make advertiſement of lies,
The prince's counſel all awry do go. Sir John Davies.

He had received advertiſement, that the party, which was ſent for his relief, had received ſome bruſh, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their ſeveral ſounds, ſerve for many kinds of advertiſements, in military affairs: the bells ſerve to proclaim a ſcare-fire; and, in ſome places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine ſervice; the hour of the day; day of the month. Holder.

Adverti'ser. n. ſ. [advertiſeur, Fr.] 1. He that gives intelligence or information. 2. The paper in which advertiſements are publiſhed.

Adve'rtising, or Adverti'sing. part. adj. [from advertiſe.] Active in giving intelligence; monitory: a word not now in uſe.

———As I was then
Advertiſing, and holy to your buſineſs,
Not changing heart with habit, I am ſtill
Attornied at your ſervice. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

To Adve'sperate. v. n. [adveſpero, Lat.] To draw towards evening. Dict.

Advi'ce. n. ſ. [avis, advis, Fr. from adviſo, low Latin.] 1. Counſel; inſtruction; except that inſtruction implies ſuperiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors. 2. Reflection; prudent conſideration: as, he always acts with good advice. 3. Conſultation; deliberation: with the particle with. 4. Intelligence: as, the merchants received advice of their loſs. This ſenſe is ſomewhat low and chiefly commercial.

(1.) Break we our match up, and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have ſeen to-night
Unto young Hamlet. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

O troubled, weak and coward, as thou art!
Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worſe extremes with ſwifter ſteps would run;
Not ſav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.

(2.) What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
So hot a ſpeed, with ſuch advice, diſpos'd,
Such temperate order, in ſo fierce a courſe,
Doth want example. Shakeſp. King John.

(3.) Great princes, taking advice with workmen, with no leſs coſt, ſet their things together. Bacon's Eſſays.

Advi'ce-boat. n. ſ. A veſſel employed to bring intelligence.

Advi'sable. adj. [from adviſe.] Prudent; fit to be adviſed.

Some judge it adviſable for a man to account with his heart every day; and this, no doubt, is the beſt and ſureſt courſe; for ſtill the oftner the better. South's Sermons.

It is not adviſable to reward, where men have the tenderneſs not to puniſh. L'Eſtrange's Fab.

Advi'sableness. n. ſ. [from adviſable.] The quality of being adviſable, or fit; fitneſs; propriety.

(1.) If you do ſtir abroad, go arm'd.——
——Arm'd, brother!
——Brother, I adviſe you to the beſt. Shak. K. Lear.

I would adviſe all gentlemen to learn merchants accounts, and not to think it a ſkill that belongs not to them. Locke.

When I conſider the ſcruples and cautions I here lay in your way, methinks it looks as if I adviſed you to ſomething which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Locke.

(2.) You were adviſ'd, his fleſh was capable
Of wounds and ſcars; and that his forward ſpirit
Would lift him, where moſt trade of danger rang'd.
Shakeſpeare.

————Such diſcourſe bring on,
As may adviſe him of his happy ſtate;

A poſting meſſenger diſpatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop adviſ'd, their aged prince. Dryden's Æneid.

(3.)————————As one affright
With helliſh fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then uproſe. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

Affri'ght. n. ſ. [from the verb.] 1. Terrour; fear. This word is chiefly poetical. 2. The cauſe of fear; a terrible object; dreadful appearance.

(1.)——As the moon, cloathed with cloudy night,
Does ſhew to him, that walks in fear and ſad affright. F. Qu.

Wide was his pariſh, not contracted cloſe
In ſtreets, but here and there a ſtraggling houſe;
Yet ſtill he was at hand, without requeſt,
To ſerve the ſick; to ſuccour the diſtreſs'd:
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempeſtuous night. Dryd. Fab.

(2.)————————I ſee the gods
Upbraid our ſuff'rings, and would humble them,
By ſending theſe affrights, while we are here,
That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. B. John. Catil.

The war at hand appears with more affright,
And riſes ev'ry moment to the ſight. Dryd. Æneid.

Affri'ghtful. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terrour; terrible; dreadful.

There is an abſence of all that is deſtructive or affrightful to human nature. Decay of Piety.

Affri'ghtment. n. ſ. [from affright.] 1. The impreſſion of fear; terrour. 2. The ſtate of fearfulneſs.

(1.) She awaked with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton.

Paſſionate words or blows from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impreſſion. Locke.

(2.) Whether thoſe that, under any anguiſh of mind, return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

To AFFRO'NT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem ſtare; ad frontem contumeliam allidere, to inſult a man to his face.] 1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This ſeems the genuine and original ſenſe of the word, which was formerly indifferent to good or ill. 2. To meet, in an hoſtile manner, front to front. 3. To offer an open inſult; to offend avowedly. With reſpect to this ſenſe, it is obſerved by Cervantes, that, if a man ſtrikes another on the back, and then runs away, the perſon ſo ſtruck is injured, but not affronted; an affront always implying a juſtification of the act.

(1.)————We have cloſely ſent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

The ſeditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway: whom when they found both ready and reſolute to fight, they deſired enterparlance. Sir John Hayward.

(2.) His holy rites and ſolemn feaſts profan'd,
And with their darkneſs durſt affront his light. Par. Loſt.

(3.) Did not this fatal war affront thy coaſt,
Yet ſatteſt thou an idle looker on. Fairfax, i. 51.

But harm precedes not ſin only our foe,
Tempting affronts us with his foul eſteem
Of our integrity. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.

——I would learn the cauſe, why Torriſmond,
Within my palace walls, within my hearing,
Almoſt within my ſight, affronts a prince,
Who ſhortly ſhall command him. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

This brings to mind Fauſtina's fondneſs for the gladiator, and is interpreted as ſatire. But how can one imagine, that the Fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius. Addiſon.

Affro'nt. n. ſ. [from the verb affront.] 1. Inſult offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment; contumely. 2. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general ſenſe. 3. Open oppoſition; encounter; a ſenſe not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation. 4. Diſgrace; ſhame. This ſenſe is rather peculiar to the Scottiſh dialect.

(1.) He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his ſon. Bacon's Eſſays.

You've done enough; for you deſign'd my chains:
The grace is vaniſh'd, but th' affront remains.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

He that is found reaſonable in one thing, is concluded to be ſo in all; and to think or ſay otherwiſe, is thought ſo unjuſt an affront, and ſo ſenſeleſs a cenſure, that no body ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with ſo much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our underſtanding, and treating us like children or ideots. Addiſon. Spect. No. 512.

(2.)————————Oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law with foul affronts,
Abominations rather. Milton's Par. Regained.

(3.) Fearleſs of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded
On hoſtile ground, none daring my affront. Samſon Agoniſt.

(4.) Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete, and, by his too great preſumption, was defeated; upon the ſenſe of which affront he died with grief. Arbuthn. on Coins.

Affr'onter. n. ſ. [from affront.] The perſon that affronts.

Affro'nting. participial adj. [from affront.] That which has the quality of affronting; contumelious.

Among words which ſignify the ſame principal ideas, ſome are clean and decent, others are unclean; ſome are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, becauſe of the ſecondary idea which cuſtom has affixed to them. Watts's Logick.

To AFFU'SE. v. a. [affundo, affuſum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I poured acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile ſalt or ſpirit, which would probably have diſcovered itſelf, by making an ebullition with the affuſed liquor. Boyle.

Affu'sion. n. ſ. [affuſio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affuſion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink. Grew's Muſæum.

In thy uprightneſs and integrity,
That I will here diſmiſs my loving friends. Shak. Tit. Andr.

Afi'eld. adv [from a and field. See Field.] To the field.

We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grey fly winds her ſultry horn,
Batt'ring our flocks with the freſh dews of night. Milton.

Afield I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine, for ſo ſhould houſewives do. Gay.

Afla't. adv. [from a and flat. See Flat.]. Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree, and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and caſt earth upon them; and every twig will take root. Bacon's Natural Hiſt.

Aflo'at. adv. [from a and float. See Float.] Floating; born up in the water; not ſinking; in a figurative ſenſe, within view; in motion.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in ſhallows and in miſeries.
On ſuch a full ſea are we now afloat;
And we muſt take the current when it ſerves,
Or loſe our ventures. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Take any paſſion of the ſoul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and, juſt in the critical height of it, nick it with ſome lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpoſe, as a ſpark of fire, falling upon gun-powder will infallibly blow it up. South.

There are generally ſeveral hundred loads of timber afloat, for they cut above twenty-five leagues up the river; and other rivers bring in their contributions. Addiſon's Italy.

In anguiſh of her ſpirit, thus ſhe pray'd. Dryden's Fab.
If, while this wearied fleſh draws fleeting breath,
Not ſatisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It hap'ly be thy will, that I ſhould know
Glimpſe of delight, or pauſe from anxious woe;
From now, from inſtant now, great Sire, diſpel
The clouds that preſs my ſoul. Prior.

Afre'sh. adv. [from a and freſh. See Fresh.] Anew; again, after intermiſſion.

The Germans ſerving upon great horſes, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by light ſkirmiſhes; the Turks, with their light horſes, eaſily ſhunning their charge, and again, at their pleaſure, charging them afreſh, when they ſaw the heavy horſes almoſt weary. Knolles's Hiſt. of the Turks.

When once we have attained theſe ideas, they may be excited afreſh by the uſe of words. Watts's Logick.

Afro'nt. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct oppoſition to the face.

Alternate, like the ſcenes of day and night. Dryden's Fab.

We ſhall examine the ways of conveyance of the ſovereignty of Adam to princes that were to reign after him. Locke.

(5.) He that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mintman, but takes greatneſs of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinſic value. Bacon.

(6.) There are, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus, in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the ſame deſign. Addiſ. Italy.

This alluſion is after the oriental manner: thus in the pſalms, how frequently are perſons compared to cedars. Pope's Od. notes.

A'fter. adv. 1. In ſucceeding time. It is uſed of time mentioned as ſucceeding ſome other. So we cannot ſay, I ſhall be happy after, but hereafter; but we ſay, I was firſt made miſerable by the loſs, but was after happier. 2. Following another.

(1.) Far be it from me, to juſtify the cruelties which were at firſt uſed towards them, which had their reward ſoon after. Bacon.

——Thoſe who, from the pit of hell
Roaming to ſeek their prey on earth, durſt fix
Their ſeats long after next the ſeat of God. Paradiſe Loſt.

(2.) Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, leſt it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakeſp. King Lear.

After is compounded with many words, but almoſt always in its genuine and primitive ſignification; ſome, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

A'fter acceptation. [from after and acceptation.] A ſenſe afterwards, not at firſt admitted.

'Tis true, ſome doctors in a ſcantier ſpace,
I mean, in each apart, contract the place:
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
The church's after acceptation join. Dryd. Hynd and Panth.

A'fterages. n. ſ. [from after and ages.] Succeſſive times; poſterity. Of this word I have found no ſingular; but ſee not why it might not be ſaid, This will be done in ſome afterage.

Not the whole land, which the Chuſites ſhould, or might in future time, conquer; ſeeing, in afterages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Nor to philoſophers is praiſe deny'd,
Whoſe wiſe inſtructions afterages guide. Sir J. Denham.

What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who bid fair for a gibbet, to bring in a ſuperſtition, which their foreſathers periſhed in flames to keep out. Addiſon.

A'FTER ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at laſt; in fine; in concluſion; upon the whole; at the moſt.

They have given no good proof in aſſerting this extravagant principle; for which, after all, they have no ground or colour, but a paſſage or two of ſcripture, miſerably perverted, in oppoſition to many expreſs texts. Atterb. Sermons.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to ſome good old authors, whoſe works I ſtudy. Pope on Paſtoral Poetry.

A'FTERBIRTH. n. ſ. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the ſecundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce ſuch virulent diſtempers of the blood, as make it caſt out a tumour. Wiſem. Surgery.

A'FTERCLAP. n. ſ. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events happening after an affair is ſuppoſed to be at an end. It is commonly taken in an ill ſenſe.

For the next morrow's meed they cloſely went,
For fear of afterclaps to prevent. Spenſ. Hub. Tale.

A'FTERCOST. n. ſ. [from after and coſt.] The latter charges; the expence incurred after the original plan is executed.

You muſt take care to carry off the land-floods and ſtreams, before you attempt draining; leſt your aftercoſt and labour prove unſucceſsful. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'FTERCROP. n. ſ. [from after and crop.] The ſecond crop or harveſt of the ſame year.

Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for the cattle. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'FTER-DINNER. n. ſ. [from after and dinner.] The hour paſſing juſt after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amuſement.

——Thou haſt nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an afterdinner's ſleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

A'FTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. ſ. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavours made after the firſt effort or endeavour.

There is no reaſon why the ſound of a pipe ſhould leave traces in their brains, which, not firſt, but by their after-endeavours, ſhould produce the like ſounds. Locke.

A'FTER-ENQUIRY. n. ſ. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.

You muſt either be directed by ſome that take upon them to know, or to take upon yourſelf that, which, I am ſure, you do not know, or lump the after-enquiry on your peril. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

To A'FTEREYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view. This is not in uſe.

Thou ſhouldſt have made him
As little as a crow, or leſs, ere left
To aftereye him. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

A'FTERGAME. n. ſ. [from after and game.] The ſcheme which may be laid, or the expedients which are practiſed after the original deſign has miſcarried; methods taken after the firſt turn of affairs.

This earl, like certain vegetables; did bud and open ſlowly, nature ſometimes delighting to play an aftergame, as well as fortune, which had both their turns and tides in courſe. Wotton.

The fables of the ax-handle and the wedge, ſerve to precaution us not to put ourſelves needleſsly upon an aftergame, but to weigh beforehand what we ſay and do. L'Eſtrange's Fab.

Our firſt deſign, my friend, has proved abortive:
Still there remains an aftergame to play. Addiſon's Cato.

A'FTERHOURS. n. ſ. [from after and hours.] The hours that ſucceed.

So ſmile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That afterhours with ſorrow chide us not.
Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'FTER-LIVER. n. ſ. [from after and live.] He that lives in ſucceeding times.

——By thee my promiſe ſent
Unto myſelf, let after-livers know. Sidney, b. ii.

A'FTERLOVE. n. ſ. [from after and love.] The ſecond or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the firſt, how heinous e'er it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee. Shakeſp. Richard II.

A'FTERMATH. n. ſ. [from after and math, from mow.] The latter math; the ſecond crop of graſs mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

A'FTERNOON. n. ſ. [from after and noon.] The time from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty-waining and diſtreſſed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her beſt days,
Made prize and purchaſe of his wanton eye.
Shakeſp. Rich. III.

However, keep the lively taſte you hold
Of God; and love him now, but fear him more;
And, in your afternoons, think what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before. Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But when the bus'neſs of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they ſpend the afternoon.
Dryden's Perſius, Sat. i.

A'FTERPAINS. n. ſ. [from after and pain.] The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the ſecundine.

A'FTERPART n. ſ. [from after and part.] The latter part.

The flexibleneſs of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headſtrong, makes it more governable and ſafe; and, in the afterpart, reaſon and foreſight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his ſafety and improvement. Locke.

A'FTERPROOF. n ſ [from after and proof.] 1. Evidence poſteriour to the thing in queſtion. 2. Qualities known by ſubſequent experience.

All know, that he likewiſe at firſt was much under the expectation of his afterproof; ſuch a ſolar influence there is in the ſolar aſpect. Wotton.

A'FTERTASTE. n. ſ. [from after and taſte.] A taſte remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

A'FTERTHOUGHT. n. ſ. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be uſed for ſecondthought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motly hue, and dark deſpair;
Suſpicions, and fantaſtical ſurmiſe,
And jealouſy ſuffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Diſcolouring all ſhe view'd, in tawny dreſs'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fiſt. Dryd. Fables.

A'FTER-TIMES. n. ſ. [from after and time.] Succeeding times. See AFTERAGES.

You promis'd once, a progeny divine
Of Romans, riſing from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes ſhould hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryd. Virgil.

A'FTERTOSSING. n. ſ. [from after and toſs.] The motion of the ſea after a ſtorm.

Confuſions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the aftertoſſings of a ſea, when the ſtorm is laid. Addiſon's Freeholder.

A'FTERWARD. adv. [from after and ƿeaꞃꝺ, Sax.] In ſucceeding time; ſometimes written afterwards, but leſs properly.

Uſes not thought upon before, may afterward ſpring up, and be reaſonable cauſes of retaining that, which former conſiderations did formerly procure to be inſtituted. Hooker.

An anxious diſtruſt of the divine goodneſs, makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miſerable beforehand, for fear of being ſo afterward. L'Eſtrange.

A'FTERWIT. n. ſ. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients after the occaſion of uſing them is paſt. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling of what's gone and paſt; ſo that afterwit comes too late, when the miſchief is done. L'Eſtrange.

A'FTER-WRATH. n. ſ. [from after and wrath] Anger when the provocation ſeems paſt.

——————— I hear him mock
The luck of Cæſar, which the Gods give men
T' excuſe their after-wrath. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.

(2.) Hence, laſtly, ſprings care of poſterities,
For things their kind would everlaſting make.
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age ſhall take. Sir J. Davies.

——————— Next, to the Son,
[illegible] mankind, by whom
New heav'n, and earth, ſhall to the ages riſe,
Or down from heav'n deſcend. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

——————— No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Roſcommon.

(3.) No longer now the golden age appears
When patriarch wits ſurviv'd a thouſand years. Pope.

(5.) You ſee how full of change his age is: the obſervation we have made of it hath not been little; he always loved our ſiſter moſt, and with what poor judgment he hath now caſt her off. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Boys muſt not have th' ambitious care of men,
Nor men the weak anxieties of age. Roſcommon.

And on his forehead, where your verſe has ſaid,
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd;
Inſulting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave ſad marks of his deſtructive ſway. Prior.

(6.) A ſolemn admiſſion of proſelytes, all that either, being of age, deſire that admiſſion for themſelves, or that, in infancy, are by others preſented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our ſires, not with their own content,
Had, ere we came to age, our portion ſpent. Dryden.

(7.) In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of diſcretion; and twenty-one years is the full age: in a woman, at ſeven years of age, the lord her father may diſtrain his tenants for aid to marry her; at the age of nine years, ſhe is dowable; at twelve years, ſhe is able finally to ratify and confirm her former conſent given to matrimony; at fourteen, ſhe is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and ſhall be out of ward at the death of her anceſtor: at ſixteen, ſhe ſhall be out of ward, though, at the death of her anceſtor, ſhe was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, ſhe is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a ſtripling is enabled to chooſe his own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man may conſent to marriage. Cowell.

A'GED. adj. [from age. It makes two ſyllables in poetry.] 1. Old; ſtricken in years; applied generally to animate beings. 2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This uſe is rare, and commonly with ſome tendency to the proſopopœia.

(1.) If the compariſon do ſtand between man and man, the aged, for the moſt part, are beſt experienced, leaſt ſubject to raſh and unadviſed paſſions. Hooker.

Novelty is only in requeſt; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of courſe, as it is virtuous to be conſtant in any undertaking. Shakeſ. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Kindneſs itſelf too weak a charm will prove,
To raiſe the feeble fires of aged love. Prior.

(2.) The people did not more worſhip the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves; and the ſame Quintilian ſaith of the aged oaks. Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

A'GEDLY. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged perſon.

AGE'N. adv. [agen, Sax.] Again; in return. See AGAIN. This word is only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the ſake of rhime.

Thus Venus: Thus her ſon reply'd agen;
None of your ſiſters have we heard or ſeen. Dryden.

A'GENCY. n. ſ. [from agent.] 1. The quality of acting; the ſtate of being in action; action. 2. The office of an agent or factor for another; buſineſs performed by an agent.

To whom nor agent, from the inſtrument,
Nor power of working, from the work is known. Davies.

Heav'n made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, tho' he foreſaw the will.
Freedom was firſt beſtow'd on human race,
And preſcience only held the ſecond place. Dryden.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, conſequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

(2.) —— All hearts in love, uſe your own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itſelf,
And truſt no agent. Shakeſpeare.

They had not the wit to ſend to them, in any orderly faſhion, agents or choſen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife,
Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your paſſion will purſue. Dryden's Aureng.

(3.) They produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

AGGELA'TION. n. ſ. [Lat. gelu.] Concretion of ice.

It is round in hail and figured in its guttulous deſcent from the air, growing greater or leſſer according to the accretion or pluvious aggelation about the fundamental atoms thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AGGENERA'TION. n. ſ. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The ſtate of growing or uniting to another body.

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a tranſmutation of nutriment; now where this converſion or aggeneration is made, there is alſo required, in the aliment, a ſimilarity of matter. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'GGERATE. v. a. [from agger, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

AGGERO'SE. adj. [from agger, Lat.] Full of heaps. Dict.

To AGGLO'MERATE. v. a. [agglomero, Lat.] 1. To gather up in a ball, as thread. 2. To gather together.

To AGGLO'MERATE. v. n.

Beſides, the hard agglomerating ſalts,
The ſpoil of ages, would impervious choke
Their ſecret channels. Thomſon's Autumn.

AGGLU'TINANTS. n. ſ. [from agglutinate.] Thoſe medicines or applications which have the power of uniting parts together.

To AGGLU'TINATE. v. n. [from ad and gluten, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, ſo as not to fall aſunder. It is a word almoſt appropriated to medicine.

The body has got room enough to grow into its full dimenſions, which is performed by the daily ingeſtion of food that is digeſted into blood; which being diffuſed through the body, is agglutinated to thoſe parts that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation-parts of the womb. Harvey on Conſumptions.

AGGLUTINA'TION. n. ſ. [from agglutinate.] Union; coheſion; the act of agglutinating; the ſtate of being agglutinated.

The occaſion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound. Wiſeman's Surgery.

If the king ſhould uſe it no better than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen, it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Theſe furniſh us with glorious ſprings and mediums, to raiſe and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our ſouls, to awaken the better paſſions, and to alleviate them even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purpoſes. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

A'GGRANDIZEMENT. n. ſ. [aggrandiſſement, Fr.] The ſtate of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

A'GGRANDIZER. n. ſ. [from aggrandize.] The perſon that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRA'TE. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To pleaſe; to treat with civilities: a word not now in uſe.

And in the midſt thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour;
The which them did in modeſt wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

To A'GGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.] 1. To make heavy; uſed only in a metaphorical ſenſe; as, to aggravate an accuſation, or a puniſhment. 2. To make any thing worſe, by the addition of ſome particular circumſtance, not eſſential.

(1.) A grove hard by, ſprung up with this their change,
His will who reigns above! to aggravate
Their penance, laden with fruit, like that
Which grew in paradiſe, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Ambitious Turnus in the preſs appears,
And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryd. Æneid.

(2.) This offence, in itſelf ſo heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or diſcontent, but an aſpiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Hen. VII.

AGGRAVA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggravate.] 1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy. 2. The act of enlarging to an enormity. 3. The extrinſical circumſtances or accidents, which encreaſe the guilt of a crime, or the miſery of a calamity.

(2.) A painter added a pair of whiſkers to the face, and by a little aggravation of the features changed it into the Saracen's head. Addiſon.

(3.) He, to the ſins which he commits, hath the aggravation ſuperadded of committing them againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, againſt ſight of the contrary law. Hammond.

———————— If it be weigh'd
By itſelf, with aggravations not ſurcharg'd,
Or elſe with juſt allowance counterpois'd,
I may, if poſſible, thy pardon find
The eaſier towards me, or thy hatred leſs. Milton.

A'GGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one maſs, body, or ſyſtem.

The ſolid reaſon of one man with unprejudicate apprehenſions, begets as firm a belief as the authority or aggregate teſtimony of many hundreds. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonſenſical ſyſtems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

A'GGREGATE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] The complex, or collective reſult of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reaſon of the far greateſt part of mankind, is but an aggregate of miſtaken phantaſms, and, in things not ſenſible, a conſtant deluſion. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

A great number of living and thinking particles could not poſſibly, by their mutual contact, and preſſing, and ſtriking, compoſe one greater individual animal, with one mind and underſtanding, and a vital conſenſion of the whole body; any more than a ſwarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and conſtituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentley.

To A'GGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together; to accumulate; to heap many particulars into one maſs.

——————— The aggregated ſoil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, ſmote. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

AGGREGA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggregate.] 1. Collection, or ſtate of being collected. 2. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole. 3. The whole compoſed by the coacervation of many particulars. An aggregate.

(1.) Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and being erroneous in their ſingle numbers, once huddled together, they will be errour itſelf. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

(2.) The water reſident in the abyſs is, in all parts of it, ſtored with a conſiderable quantity of heat, and more eſpecially in thoſe where theſe extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

To AGGRE'SS. v. n. [aggredior, aggreſſum, Lat.] To commit the firſt act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

— The glorious pair advance
With mingl'd anger, and collected might,
To turn the war, and tell aggreſſing France,
How Britain's ſons, and Britain's friends can fight. Prior.

AGGRE'SSION. n. ſ. [aggreſſio, Lat.] The firſt act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by ſome act of iniquity.

There is no reſiſting of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be alſo, on the other hand, a conſpiracy of common enmity and aggreſſion. L'Eſtrange.

AGGRE'SSOR. n. ſ. [from aggreſs.] The perſon that firſt commences hoſtility; the aſſaulter or invader, oppoſed to the defendant.

——————— Fly in Nature's face?
But how, if nature fly in my face firſt?
Then nature's the aggreſſor: Let her look to't. Dryden.

It is a very unlucky circumſtance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of ſuch authours, whoſe works are ſo ſoon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the firſt aggreſſors. Pope and Swift.

AGGRI'EVANCE. n. ſ. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardſhip inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRI'EVE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.] 1. To give ſorrow; to cauſe grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active. 2. To impoſe ſome hardſhips upon; to haraſs; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical ſenſe; and whenever it is uſed now, it ſeems to bear ſome alluſion to forms of law.

(1.) But while therein I took my chief delight,
I ſaw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The ſpring, the place, and all clean out of ſight:
Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour. Spenſer.

(2.) Sewall, archbiſhop of York, much aggrieved with ſome practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Camden.

The landed man finds himſelf aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the ſtreightening of his fortune; whilſt the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
Chloe complains, and wond'rouſly's aggriev'd. Granville.

To AGGROU'P. v. a. [aggropare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of different natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleaſant to the ſight. Dryden.

AGHA'ST. adj. [either the participle of agaze, (ſee AGAZE) and then to be written agazed, or agaſt, or from a and ᵹ´ꞅꞇ, a ghoſt, which the preſent orthography favours; perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horrour, as at the ſight of a ſpectre; ſtupified with terrour. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

She ſighing ſore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-ſtrings braſt,
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up like one aghaſt. Spenſer.

The aged earth aghaſt,
With terrour of that blaſt,
Shall from the ſurface to the centre ſhake. Milton.

Aghaſt he wak'd, and ſtarting from his bed,
Cold ſweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erſpread.
Dryden's Æneid.

I laugh to think how your unſhaken Cato
Will look aghaſt, while unforeſeen deſtruction
Pours in upon him thus from every ſide. Addiſon. Cato.

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being ſpeedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horſe the head,
And bending forward ſtruck his agile heels
Againſt the panting ſides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel-head. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

The immediate and agile ſubſervience of the ſpirits to the empire of the mind or ſoul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, ſage,
As fits the various courſe of human age. Prior.

A'GILENESS. n. ſ. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleneſs; readineſs for motion; quickneſs; activity; agility.

AGI'LITY. n. ſ. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleneſs; readineſs to move; quickneſs; activity.

A limb-overſtrained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGI'LLOCHUM. n. ſ. Aloes wood. A tree in the Eaſt-Indies, brought to us in ſmall bits, of a very fragrant ſcent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a ſtrengthener of the nerves in general. The beſt is of a blackiſh purple colour, and ſo light as to ſwim upon water. Quincy.

A'GIO. n. ſ. [An Italian word, ſignifying eaſe or conveniency.] A mercantile term, uſed chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money. Chambers.

To AGI'ST. v. a. [from giſte, Fr. a bed or reſting-place, or from giſter, i. e. ſtabulari.] To take in and feed the cattle of ſtrangers in the king's foreſt, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agiſtors, in Engliſh gueſt or giſt-takers. Their function is termed agiſtment; as, agiſtment upon the ſea banks. This word agiſt is alſo uſed, for the taking in of other mens cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Blount.

AGI'STMENT. n. ſ [See AGIST.] It is taken by the canon lawyers in another ſenſe than is mentioned under agiſt. They ſeem to intend by it, a modus or compoſition, or mean rate, at which ſome right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from addouciſſement, or adjuſtment.

AGI'STOR. n. ſ. [from agiſt.] An officer of the king's foreſt. See AGIST.

A'GITABLE. n. ſ. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that which may be diſputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a [agito, Lat] 1. To put in motion; to ſhake; to move nimbly; as, the ſurface of the waters is agitated by the wind; the veſſel was broken by agitating the liquor. 2. A natural and prompt alacrity
I find in hardneſs. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

Agnomina'tion. n. ſ. [agnominatio, Lat.] Alluſion of one word to another, by reſemblance of ſound.

The Britiſh yet continueth in Wales, and ſome villages of Cornwall, intermingled with provincial Latin, being very ſignificative, copious, and pleaſantly running upon agnominations, although harſh in aſpirations. Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. ſ. [Lat.] The name of the tree commonly called the Chaſte Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preſerving chaſtity.

Of laurel ſome, of woodbine many more,
And wreathes of agnus caſtus others bore. Dryden.

Ago'. adv. [aᵹan, Sax. paſt or gone; whence writers formerly uſed, and in ſome provinces the people ſtill uſe, agone for ago.] Paſt; as, long ago; that is, long time has paſt ſince. Reckoning time towards the preſent, we uſe ſince; as, it is a year ſince it happened: reckoning from the preſent, we uſe ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always obſerved.

——————— The great ſupply,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin ſands. Shakeſp.

This both by others and myſelf I know,
For I have ſerv'd their ſovereign long ago;
Oft have been caught within the winding train. Dryd. Fab.

I ſhall ſet down an account of a diſcourſe I chanced to have with one of them ſome time ago. Addiſon. Freeholder.

Ago'g. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology; the French have the term à gogo, in low language; as, ils vivint à gogo, they live to their wiſh; from this phraſe our word may be, perhaps, derived.] 1. In a ſtate of deſire; in a ſtate of warm imagination; heated with the notion of ſome enjoyment; longing; ſtrongly excited. 2. It is uſed with the verbs to be, or to ſet; as, he is agog, or you may ſet him agog. 3. It has the particles on, or for, before the object of deſire.

(1.) As for the ſenſe and reaſon of it, that has little or nothing to do here; only let it ſound full and round, and chime right to the humour, which is at preſent agog, (juſt as a big, long, rattling name is ſaid to command even adoration from a Spaniard) and, no doubt, with this powerful, ſenſeleſs engine, the rabble-driver ſhall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

(2.) The gawdy goſſip, when ſhe's ſet agog,
In jewels dreſs'd, and at each ear a bob,
Goes flaunting out, and in her trim of pride,
Thinks all ſhe ſays or does, is juſtify'd. Dryd. Juv. Sat. 6.

This maggot has no ſooner ſet him agog, but he gets him a ſhip, freights her, builds caſtles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L'Eſtrange.

(3.) On which the ſaints are all agog,
And all this for a bear and dog. Hudibras, cant. ii.

Gypſies generally ſtraggle into theſe parts, and ſet the heads of our ſervant-maids ſo agog for huſbands, that we do not expect to have any buſineſs done as it ſhould be, whilſt they are in the country. Addiſon. Spectator.

But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting ſides. Dryden, Æn. vii. l. 691.

(2.) That arrows fled not ſwifter toward their aim,
Than did our ſoldiers, aiming at their ſafety,
Fly from the field. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.

(3.) He truſted to have equall'd the moſt High,
If he oppos'd: and, with ambitious aim
Againſt the throne, and monarchy of God,
Rais'd impious war. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. i. l. 41.

But ſee, how oft ambitious aims are croſt,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is loſt. Pope.

(4.) The ſafeſt way is to ſuppoſe, that the epiſtle has but one aim, till, by a frequent peruſal of it, you are forced to ſee there are diſtinct independent parts. Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

(5.) It is impoſſible, by aim, to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that there was ever any of the particulars thereof. Spenſer on Ireland.

There is a hiſtory in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which obſerv'd, a man may propheſy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life, which, in their ſeeds
And weak beginnings, lie intreaſur'd. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

I aſcended the higheſt hills of Bagdat, in order to paſs the reſt of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myſelf on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Addiſ. Spect.

(4.) You may add their buſy, dangerous, diſcourteous, yea, and ſometimes deſpiteful ſtealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who, if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be ſtore ſufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good houſewives chickens in a country. Carew's Survey of Cornw.

A'IRBLADDER. n. ſ. [from air and bladder.] 1. Any cuticle or veſicle filled with air. 2. The bladder in fiſhes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and riſe or fall.

(1.) The pulmonary artery and vein paſs along the ſurfaces of theſe airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

(2.) Though the airbladder in fiſhes ſeems neceſſary for ſwimming, yet ſome are ſo formed as to ſwim without it. Cudw.

A'IRBUILT. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any ſolid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradiſe, the ſtateſman's ſcheme,
The airbuilt caſtle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantick wiſh, the chymiſt's flame,
And poet's viſion of eternal fame. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

AIR-DRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air: a word not uſed.

This is the very painting of your fear,
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you ſaid,
Led you to Duncan. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

A'IRER. n. ſ. [from To air.] He that expoſes to the air.

A'IRHOLE. n. ſ. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

A'IRINESS. n. ſ [from airy.] 1. Openneſs; expoſure to the air. 2. Lightneſs; gaiety; levity.

(2.) The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make claſſick learning ſpeak their language; if they have not ſucceeded, it muſt be imputed to a certain talkativeneſs and airineſs repreſented in their tongue, which will never agree with the ſedateneſs of the Romans, or the ſolemnity of the Greeks. Felton.

A'IRING. n. ſ. [from air.] A ſhort journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet ſerves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the ſummer-ſeaſon. Addiſon.

AIRLESS. adj. [from air.] Wanting communication with the free air.

Nor ſtony tower, nor walls of beaten braſs,
Nor airleſs dungeon, nor ſtrong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the ſtrength of ſpirit. Shakeſp. J. Cæſar.

A'IRLING. n. ſ. [from air, for gayety.] A young, light, thoughtleſs, gay perſon.

Some more there be, ſlight airlings, will be won
With dogs, and horſes, and perhaps a whore. B. Johnſ.

A'IRPUMP. n. ſ. [from air and pump.] A machine by whoſe means the air is exhauſted out of proper veſſels. The principle on which it is built, is the elaſticity of the air; as that on which the waterpump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious inſtrument is aſcribed to Otto de Guerick, conſul of Magdebourg, in 1654. But his machine laboured under ſeveral defects, the force neceſſary to work it was very great, and the progreſs very ſlow; it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of ſubjects for experiments. Mr. Boyle, with the aſſiſtance of Dr. Hooke, removed ſeveral inconveniencies; though, ſtill, the working was laborious, by reaſon of the preſſure of the atmoſphere at every exſuction. This labour has been ſince removed by Mr. Hawkſbee; who, by adding a ſecond barrel and piſton, to riſe as the other fell, and fall as it roſe, made the preſſure of the atmoſphere on the deſcending one, of as much ſervice as it was of diſſervice in the aſcending one. Vream made a further improvement, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

The air that, in exhauſted receivers of airpumps, is exhaled from minerals, and fleſh, and fruits, and liquors, is as true and genuine as to elaſticity and denſity, or rarefaction, as that we reſpire in; and yet this factitious air is ſo far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even ſooner than the abſence of air, or a vacuum itſelf. Bentley.

A'IRSHAFT. n. ſ. [from air and ſhaft.] A paſſage for the air into mines and ſubterraneous places.

By the ſinking of an airſhaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the ſteams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwiſe ſtagnate there. Ray.

A'IRY. adj. [from air; aëreus, Lat.] 1. Compoſed of air. 2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air. 3. High in air. 4. Open to the free air. 5. Light as air; thin; unſubſtantial; without ſolidity. 6. Wanting reality; having no ſteady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling. 7. Fluttering; looſe; as if to catch the air; full of levity. 8. Gay; ſprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; ſpirited; light of heart.

(1.) The firſt is the tranſmiſſion, or emiſſion, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the reſt, the moſt corporeal. Bacon.

(2.) There are fiſhes that have wings, that are no ſtrangers to the airy region. Boyle.

(3.) Whole rivers here forſake the fields below,
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow. Addiſon.

(4.) Joy'd to range abroad in freſh attire
Thro' the wide compaſs of the airy coaſt. Spenſer.

(5.) I behold ambition of ſo airy and light a quality, that it is but a ſhadow's ſhadow. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops conſtrain
Of airy ghoſts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

(6.)———Nor think with wind
Of airy threats to awe whom yet with deeds
Thou can'ſt not. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Nor (to avoid ſuch meanneſs) ſoaring high,
With empty ſound, and airy notions, fly. Roſcommon.

I have found a complaint concerning the ſcarcity of money, which occaſioned many airy propoſitions for the remedy of it. Temple's Miſcellanies.

(7.) The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reſerved for queens and goddeſſes. Dryden.

By this name of ladies, he means all young perſons, ſlender, finely ſhaped, airy, and delicate: ſuch as are nymphs and Naïads. Dryden.

(8.) He that is merry and airy at ſhore, when he ſees a ſad tempeſt on the ſea, or dances when God thunders from heaven, regards not when God ſpeaks to all the world. Taylor.

AISLE. n. ſ. [Thus the word is written by Addiſon, but perhaps improperly; ſince it ſeems deducible only from either aile, a wing, or allée, a path, and is therefore to be written aile.] The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means ſo magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aiſle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addiſon.

AIT, or EYGHT. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed. by Skinner, to be corrupted from iſlet.] A ſmall iſland in a river.

AJUTAGE. n. ſ. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to water-works. Dict.

To AKE. v. n. [from ἄχος, Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ache.] 1. To feel a laſting pain, generally of the internal parts; diſtinguiſhed from ſmart, which is commonly uſed of uneaſineſs in the external parts; but this is no accurate account. 2. It is frequently applied, in an improper ſenſe, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakeſpeare has uſed it, ſtill more licentiouſly, of the ſoul.

(1.) To ſue, and be deny'd, ſuch common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakeſp.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a ſenſe
Of pain. Shakeſp.

Were the pleaſure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that ſick ſtomach and aking head, which, in ſome men, are ſure to follow, I think, no body would ever let wine touch his lips. Locke.

His limbs muſt ake, with daily toils oppreſt,
Ere long-wiſh'd night brings neceſſary reſt. Prior.

(2.)————My ſoul akes
To know when two authorities are up,
Neither ſupreme, how ſoon confuſion
May enter. Shakeſp. Coriol.

Here ſhame diſſuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each, by turns, his aking heart aſſails. Addiſon.

Aki'n. adj. [from a and kin.] 1. Related to; allied by blood: uſed of perſons. 2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the ſame properties: uſed of things.

(1.) I do not envy thee, Pamela; only I wiſh, that, being thy ſiſter in nature, I were not ſo far off akin in fortune. Sidney.

(2.) The cankered paſſion of envy is nothing akin to the ſilly envy of the aſs. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Some limbs again in bulk or ſtature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends,
Becauſe one ſerves the other's ends. Prior.

He ſeparates it from queſtions, with which it may have been complicated, and diſtinguiſhes it from queſtions which may be akin to it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Al, Attle, Adle, do all ſeem to be corruptions of the Saxon, Æþel, noble, famous; as alſo, Alling and Adling, are corruptions of Æþelinᵹ, noble, ſplendid, famous. Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Ealꝺ, ancient: and ſo, oftentimes, the initial all, being melted by the Normans, from the Saxon ealꝺ. Gibſ. Camden.

A'labaster. n. ſ. [ἀλάβαστρον.] A kind of ſoft marble, eaſier to cut, and leſs durable, than the other kinds; ſome is white, which is moſt common; ſome of the colour of horn, and tranſparent; ſome yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients uſed it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

————Yet I'll not ſhed her blood,
Nor ſcar that whiter ſkin of hers than ſnow,
And ſmooth as monumental alabaſter. Shakeſp.

A'labaster. adj. Made of alabaſter.

I cannot forbear mentioning part of an alabaſter column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be ſeen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the ſhape of a croſs, in a hole of the wall; ſo that the light paſſing through it, makes it look to thoſe in the church, like a huge tranſparent croſs of amber. Addiſon on Italy.

Ala'ck. interject. [This word ſeems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expreſſion of ſorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.
Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

At thunder now no more I ſtart,
Than at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

Ala'ckaday. interjection. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting ſorrow and melancholy.

Ala'criously. adv. [from alacrious, ſuppoſed to be formed from alacris; but of alacrious I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriouſly expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had atchieved for his country. Government of the Tongue.

Ala'crity. n. ſ. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulneſs, expreſſed by ſome outward token; ſprightlineſs; gayety; livelineſs; cheerful willingneſs.

Theſe orders were, on all ſides, yielded unto with no leſs alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to ſhew when they take conditions, ſuch as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow ſtraits of advantage. Hooker.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of ſpirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakeſ.

He glad, that now his ſea ſhould find a ſhore
With freſh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to fly:
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praiſe them, all the ſtates ſtood by. Dryden.

Alamire. n. ſ. The loweſt note but one in Guido Aretine's ſcale of muſick.

Alamo'de. adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the faſhion: a low word. It is uſed likewiſe by ſhopkeepers for a kind of thin ſilken manufacture.

He only, with the prince his couſin, were caſt aland, far off from the place whither their deſires would have guided them. Sidney.

Three more, fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Daſh'd on the ſhallows of the moving ſand,
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland. Dryden.

Ala'rm. n. ſ. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.] 1. A cry by which men are ſummoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy. 2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire. 3. Any tumult or diſturbance.

(1.) When the congregation is to be gathered together, you ſhall blow, but you ſhall not ſound an alarm. Numbers.

God himſelf is with us for our captain, and his prieſts with ſounding trumpets, to cry alarms againſt you. Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With ſhrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Taught by this ſtroke, renounce the wars alarms,
And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope's Iliad.

Crowds of rivals, for thy mother's charms,
Thy palace fill with inſults and alarms. Pope's Odyſſ.

When pain diſtreſſes, or when pleaſure charms. Tickell.

(4.) His ſon, Cupavo, bruſh'd the briny flood;
Upon his ſtern a brawny Centaur ſtood,
Who heav'd a rock, and threatening ſtill to throw,
With lifted hands alarm'd the ſeas below. Dryden.

Ala'rmbell. n. ſ. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarmbell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And, from the ſtreets, ſound drums and ataballes. Dryden.

Ala'rming. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; ſurpriſing; as, an alarming meſſage; an alarming pain.

Ala'rmpost. n. ſ. [from alarm and poſt.] The poſt or place appointed to each body of men, to appear at, when an alarm ſhall happen.

Ala'rum. n. ſ. [corrupted, as it ſeems, from alarm. See Alarm.]

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruiſed arms hung up for monuments,
Our ſtern alarums chang'd to merry meetings. Shakeſp.

That Almatro might better hear,
She ſets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harſh or ſweet,
Are but th' alarums which they beat. Prior.

To Ala'rum. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm. See Alarm.]

————Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his ſentinel the wolf,
Whoſe howl's his watch) thus with his ſtealthy pace
Moves like a ghoſt. Shakeſp.

Alas! how little from the grave we claim?
Thou but preſerv'ſt a form, and I a name. Pope.

(2.) Alas! poor Protheus, thou haſt entertain'd
A fox to be the ſhepherd of thy lambs. Shakeſp.

(3.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, ſmite with thine hand, and ſtamp with thy foot, and ſay, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the houſe of Iſrael. Ezekiel.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cauſe! Milton.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field;
Pitious indeed muſt be, when I, a ſpirit,
Can have ſo ſoft a ſenſe of human woes. Dryden.

ALAS THE DAY. interject. Ah, unhappy day!

Alas! the day! I never gave him cauſe. Shakeſp.

Alas a day! you have ruined my poor miſtreſs: you have made a gap in her reputation, and can you blame her, if ſhe make it up with her huſband? Congreve.

ALAS THE WHILE. interject. Ah! unhappy time!

All as the ſheep, ſuch was the ſhepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, (alas the while!)
May ſeem he loved, or elſe ſome care he took. Spenſer.

A'LECONNER. n. ſ. [from ale and con.] An officer in the city of London, whoſe buſineſs is to inſpect the meaſures of publick houſes. Four of them are choſen or rechoſen annually by the common-hall of the city; and whatever might be their uſe formerly, their places are now regarded only as fine-cures for decayed citizens.

A'LECOST. n. ſ. [perhaps from ale, and coſtus, Lat.] The name of an herb. Dict.

ALE'CTRYOMANCY, or ALE'CTOROMANCY. n. ſ. [ἀλεκτρυὼν and μάντις.] Divination by a cock. Dict.

A'LEGAR. n. ſ. [from ale and eager, ſour.] Sour ale; a kind of acid made by ale, as vinegar by wine, which has loſt its ſpirit.

A'LEGER. adj [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; ſprightly: a word not now uſed.

Coffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all condenſe the ſpirits, and make them ſtrong and aleger. Bacon's Natural Hiſt.

A'LEHOOF. n. ſ. [from ale and hoofd, head.] Groundivy, ſo called by our Saxon anceſtors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. An herb.

Alehoof, or groundivy, is, in my opinion, of the moſt excellent and moſt general uſe and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

A'LEHOUSE. n. ſ. [from ale and houſe.] A houſe where ale is publickly ſold; a tippling-houſe. It is diſtinguiſhed from a tavern, where they ſell wine.

——— ———Thou moſt beauteous inn,
Why ſhould hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouſe gueſt? Shakeſp.

One would think it ſhould be no eaſy matter to bring any man of ſenſe in love with an alehouſe; indeed of ſo much ſenſe, as ſeeing and ſmelling amounts to; there being ſuch ſtrong encounters of both, as would quickly ſend him packing, did not the love of good fellowſhip reconcile to theſe nuſances. South.

Thee ſhall each alehouſe, thee each gilhouſe mourn,
And anſw'ring ginſhops ſowrer ſighs return. Pope.

A'LEHOUSE-KEEPER. n. ſ. [from alehouſe and keeper.] He that keeps ale publickly to ſell.

You reſemble perfectly the two alehouſe-keepers in Holland, who were at the ſame time burgomaſters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Letter to Swift.

A'LEKNIGHT. n. ſ. [from ale and knight.] A pot companion; a tippler: a word now out of uſe.

The old aleknights of England were well depainted by Hanville, in the ale-houſe colours of that time. Camden.

ALE'MBICK. n. ſ. A veſſel uſed in diſtilling, conſiſting of a veſſel placed over a fire, in which is contained the ſubſtance to be diſtilled, and a concave cloſely fitted on, into which the fumes ariſe by the heat; this cover has a beak or ſpout, into which the vapours riſe, and by which they paſs into a ſerpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condenſed, and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied into inviſible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only ſcattered into minute parts; which meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do preſently return into ſuch water as they conſtituted before. Boyle.

ALE'NGTH. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along; ſtretched along the ground.

ALE'RT. adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris, but probably from à l' art, according to art or rule.] 1. In the military ſenſe, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call. 2. In the common ſenſe, briſk; pert; petulant; ſmart; implying ſome degree of cenſure and contempt.

(2.) I ſaw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his, and accoſted him; Well, Jack, the old prig is dead at laſt. Addiſon. Spectator.

ALE'RTNESS. n. ſ. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; ſprightlineſs; pertneſs.

That alertneſs and unconcern for matters of common life, a campaign or two would infallibly have given him. Addiſon. Spectator.

A'LETASTER. n. ſ. [from ale and taſter.] An officer appointed in every courtleet, and ſworn to look to the aſſize and the goodneſs of bread and ale, or beer, within the precincts of that lordſhip. Cowell.

A'LEVAT. n. ſ. [from ale and vat.] The tub in which the ale is fermented.

A'LEW. n. ſ. Clamour; outcry. Not in uſe. Spenſer.

A'LEWASHED. adj. [from ale and waſh.] Steeped or ſoaked in ale: not now in uſe.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid ſuit of the camp, will do among foaming battles and alewaſhed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakeſp.

A'LEWIFE. n. ſ. [from ale and wife.] A woman that keeps an alehouſe.

Perhaps he will ſwagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an alewife, or take the goods by force, and throw them the bad halfpence. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

A'LEXANDERS. n. ſ. [ſmyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

A'LEXANDER'S-FOOT. n. ſ. The name of an herb.

ALEXA'NDRINE. n. ſ. A kind of verſe borrowed from the French, firſt uſed in a poem called Alexander. They conſiſt, among the French, of twelve and thirteen ſyllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers ſhould, for the moſt part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majeſty of thought requires it, they may be ſtretched to the Engliſh heroick of five feet, and to the French Alexandrine of ſix. Dryden.

Then, at the laſt, an only couplet fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along.
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

ALEXIPHA'RMICK. adj. [from ἀλεξέω and φάρμακον.] That which drives away poiſon: antidotal; that which oppoſes infection.

Some antidotal quality it may have, ſince not only the bone in the hart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALEXITE'RICAL, or ALEXITE'RICK. adj. [from ἀλεξέω.] That which drives away poiſon; that which reſiſts fevers.

A'LGATES. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the ſame as via; and ſtill uſed for way in the Scottiſh dialect.] On any terms; every way: now obſolete.

Nor had the boaſter ever riſen more,
But that Renaldo's horſe, ev'n then down fell,
And with the fall his leg oppreſs'd ſo ſore,
That, for a ſpace, there muſt he algates dwell. Fairfax.

الجبرة

A'LGEBRA. n. ſ. [an Arabick word of uncertain etymology; derived, by ſome, from Geber the philoſopher; by ſome, from geſr, parchment; by others, from algebiſta, a boneſetter; by Menage, from algiabarat, the reſtitution of things broken.] good and right opinion.

This is a peculiar kind of arithmetick, which takes the quantity ſought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted, and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by conſequence, till the quantity at firſt only ſuppoſed to be known, or at leaſt ſome power thereof, is found to be equal to ſome quantity or quantities which are known, and conſequently itſelf is known. This art was in uſe among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world; and they are ſuppoſed to have borrowed it from the Perſians, and the Perſians from the Indians. The firſt Greek author of algebra was Diophantus, who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books. In 1494, Lucas Pacciolus, or Lucas de Burgos, a cordelier, printed a treatiſe of algebra, in Italian, at Venice. He ſays, that algebra came originally from the Arabs. After ſeveral improvements by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Deſcartes, Sir Iſaac Newton brought this art to the height at which it ſtill continues. Trevoux. Chambers.

It would ſurely require no very profound ſkill in algebra, to reduce the difference of ninepence in thirty ſhillings. Swift.

ALGEBRA'ICK. } adj. [from algebra.] 1. Relating to ALGEBRA'ICAL. } algebra; as, an algebraical treatiſe. 2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation.

ALGEBRA'IST. n. ſ. [from algebra.] A perſon that underſtands or practiſes the ſcience of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraiſt or uncipherer can uſe more ſubtle ſuppoſitions, to find the demonſtration or cipher, than every unconcerned perſon doth to find the murderers. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Confining themſelves to the ſynthitick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraiſts, they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logick.

A'LGID. adj. [algidas, Lat.] Cold; chill. Dict.

ALGI'DITY. }
A'LGIDNESS. } n. ſ. [from algid.] Chilneſs; cold. Dict.

ALGI'FIC. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That which produces cold. Dict.

A'LGOR. n. ſ. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chilneſs. Dict.

A'LGORISM. } n. ſ. Arabick words, which are uſed to A'LGORITHM. } imply the ſix operations of arithmetick, or the ſcience of numbers. Dict.

ALGO'SE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

A'LIAS. adv. A Latin word, ſignifying otherwiſe; often uſed in the trials of criminals, whoſe danger has obliged them to change their names; as, Simſon alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwiſe Smith, otherwiſe Baker.

A'LIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nouriſhing; or that which may be nouriſhed. Dict.

A'LIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.] 1. Foreign, or not of the ſame family or land. 2. Eſtranged from; not allied to; adverſe to; with the particle from, and ſometimes to, but improperly.

(1.) The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryden.
———————From native ſoil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of his young guiltleſs progeny, he ſeeks
Inglorious ſhelter in an alien land. Philips.

(2.) To declare my mind to the diſciples of the fire, by a ſimilitude not alien from their profeſſion. Boyle.

The ſentiment that ariſes, is a conviction of the deplorable ſtate of nature, to which ſin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodneſs, and a prey to the great deſtroyer. Rogers's Sermons.

They encouraged perſons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to ſtrengthen their faction. Swift's Miſcellanies.

A'LIEN. n. ſ. [alienus, Lat.] 1. A foreigner; not a deniſon; a man of another country or family; one not allied; a ſtranger. 2. [In law.] An alien is one born in a ſtrange country, and never enfranchiſed. A man born out of the land, ſo it be within the limits beyond the ſeas, or of Engliſh parents out of the king's obedience, ſo the parents, at the time of the birth, be of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but deniſons. Cowell.

(1.) In whomſoever theſe things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only ſhe holdeth for aliens and ſtrangers, in whom theſe things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd againſt an alien,
He ſeeks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainſt the which he doth contrive,
Shall ſeize on half his goods. Shakeſp. Merch. of Ven.

The mere Iriſh were not only accounted aliens, but enemies, ſo as it was no capital offence to kill them. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou haſt rudely loſt,
Which by thy younger brother is ſupply'd,
And art almoſt an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shakeſp.

The lawgiver condemned the perſons, who ſat idle in diviſions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addiſ. Freeholder.

To A'LIEN. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.] 1. To make any thing the property of another. 2. To eſtrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averſe; with from.

(1.) If the ſon alien lands, and then repurchaſe them again in fee, the rules of deſcents are to be obſerved, as if he were the original purchaſer. Hale's Hiſtory of Com. Law.

(2.) The king was diſquieted, when he found, that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

A'LIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treaſure is tranſitory, and both muſt paſs from him, by his own voluntary act, or by the violence of others, or at leaſt by fate. Dennis's Letters.

To A'LIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.] 1. To tranſfer the property of any thing to another. 2. To withdraw the heart or affections; with the particle from, where the firſt poſſeſſer is mentioned.

(1.) The countries of the Turks were once chriſtian, and members of the church, and where the golden candleſticks did ſtand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no chriſtians left. Bacon.

(2.) The manner of mens writing muſt not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never ſo true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes ſurvey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Any thing that is apt to diſturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, ſuch as croſs and diſtaſteful humours, is, either expreſsly, or by clear conſequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Teſtament. Tillotſon.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honeſt Caſtilian, whom ſhe was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Addiſon.

A'LIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; ſtranger to; with the particle from.

The Whigs are damnably wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge, by all deſperate methods; wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, conſcience, or honour. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ALIENA'TION. n. ſ. [alienatio, Lat.] 1. The act of transferring property. 2. The ſtate of being alienated; as, the eſtate was waſted during its alienation. 3. Change of affection. 4. Applied to the mind, it means diſorder of the faculties.

(1.) This ordinance was for the maintenance of their lands in their poſterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof under ſtrangers. Spenſ. State of Irel.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to ſacrilege. Her ſucceſſour paſſed a law, which prevented all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterb.

Great changes and alienations of property, have created new and great dependencies. Swift on Athens and Rome.

(3.) It is left but in dark memory, what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

(4.) Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulſion, though not againſt, yet without their wills; as in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter abſence of wit and judgment. Hooker.

ALI'FEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. Dict.

ALI'GEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To ALI'GGE. v. a. [from a, and lig, to lye down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to ſubdue: an old word even in the time of Spenſer, now wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why ſitten we ſo,
As weren overwent with woe:
Upon ſo fair a morrow,
The joyous time now nigheth faſt,
That ſhall aligge this bitter blaſt,
And ſlake the winter ſorrow. Spenſer's Paſtor.

To ALI'GHT. v. n. [alihꞇan, Sax. af-lichten, Dutch.] 1. To come down, and ſtop. The word implies the idea of deſcending; as, of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horſe or carriage, and generally of reſting or ſtopping. 2. It is uſed alſo of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

(1.) There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen.

———There is alighted at your gate
A young Venetian. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

Slackneſs breeds worms; but the ſure traveller,
Though he alights ſometimes, ſtill goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot he walks till night:
When with his horſe he never will alight. Denh.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan ſhore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;
To the Cumean coaſt at length he came,
And here alighting built this coſtly frame. Dryd. Æn.

When he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to deſcend, he came down gently and circling in the air, and ſinging to the ground. Like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her ſong till ſhe alights; ſtill preparing for a higher flight at her next ſally. Dryden.

———When finiſh'd was the fight,
The victors from their luſty ſteeds alight;
Like them diſmounted all the warlike train. Dryden.

Should a ſpirit of ſuperiour rank, a ſtranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Addiſon. Spectator.

(2.) But ſtorms of ſtones from the proud temple's height,
Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight. Dryden.

ALI'KE. adv. [from a and like.] With reſemblance; without difference; in the ſame manner; in the ſame form. In ſome expreſſions it has the appearance of an adjective, but is always an adverb.

The darkneſs hideth not from thee; but the night ſhineth as the day: the darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee. Pſalm cxxxix. 12.

With thee converſing, I forget all time;
All ſeaſons, and their change, all pleaſe alike. Parad. Loſt.

Riches cannot reſcue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the ſlave. Dryd.

Let us unite at leaſt in an equal zeal for thoſe capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,
But different far in figure and in face. Pope.

A'LIMENT. n. ſ. [alimentum, Lat.] Nouriſhment; that which nouriſhes; nutriment; food.

New parts are added to our ſubſtance; and as we die, we are born daily; nor can we give an account, how the aliment is prepared for nutrition, or by what mechaniſm it is diſtributed. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and ſolids of our bodies, are called aliments. In the largeſt ſenſe, by aliment, I underſtand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink; and ſeaſoning, as, ſalt, ſpice, vinegar. Arbuthn.

ALIME'NTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That which has the quality of aliment; that which nouriſhes; that which feeds.

The ſun, that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimental recompenſe,
In humid exhalations. Milt. Parad. Loſt.

Except they be watered from higher regions, theſe weeds muſt loſe their alimental ſap, and wither. Brown.

Th' induſtrious, when the ſun in Leo rides,
Forget not, at the foot of ev'ry plant,
To ſink a circling trench, and daily pour
A juſt ſupply of alimental ſtreams,
Exhauſted ſap recruiting. Philips.

ALIME'NTALLY. adv. [from alimental.] So as to ſerve for nouriſhment.

The ſubſtance of gold is invincible by the powerfulleſt heat, and that not only alimentally in a ſubſtantial mutation, but alſo medicamentally in any corporeal converſion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALIME'NTARINESS. n. ſ. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nouriſhment. Dict.

ALIME'NTARY. adj. [from aliment.] 1. That which belongs or relates to aliment. 2. That which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nouriſhing.

(1.) The ſolution of the aliment by maſtication is neceſſary; without it, the aliment could not be diſpoſed for the changes which it receives as it paſſeth through the alimentary duct. Arb. on Aliments.

(2.) I do not think that water ſupplies animals, or even plants, with nouriſhment, but ſerves for a vehicle to the alimentary ticles, to convey and diſtribute them to the ſeveral parts of the body. Ray on the Creation.

Of alimentary roots, ſome are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turnips and carrots. Theſe have a fattening quality. Arbuthn. on Alim.

Alimenta'tion. n. ſ. [from aliment.] 1. The power of affording aliment; the quality of nouriſhing. 2. The ſtate of being nouriſhed by aſſimulation of matter received.

Plants do nouriſh; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bac. Nat. Hiſt.

Alimo'nious. adj. [from alimony.] That which nouriſhes: a word very little in uſe.

The plethora renders us lean, by ſuppreſſing our ſpirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digeſting the alimonious humours into fleſh. Harvey on Conſump.

A'LIMONY. n. ſ. [alimonia, Lat.] Alimony ſignifies that legal proportion of the huſband's eſtate, which by the ſentence of the eccleſiaſtical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any ſeparation from him, provided it be not cauſed by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Before they ſettled hands and hearts,
Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras.

A'liquant. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as, 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice three being 9, four times 3 making 12.

A'liquot. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, ſuch as will exactly meaſure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, becauſe, being taken four times, it will juſt meaſure it.

A'lish. adj. [from ale.] Reſembling ale; having qualities of ale

Stirring it and beating down the yeaſt, gives it the ſweet aliſh taſte. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'liture. n. ſ. [alitura, Lat.] Nouriſhment. Dict.

Ali've. adj. [from a and live.] 1. In the ſtate of life; not dead. 2. In a figurative ſenſe, unextinguiſhed; undeſtroyed; active; in full force. 3. Cheerful; ſprightly; full of alacrity. 4. In a popular ſenſe, it is uſed only to add an emphaſis, like the French du monde; as, the beſt man alive; that is, the beſt, with an emphaſis. This ſenſe has been long in uſe, and was once admitted into ſerious writings, but is now merely ludicrous.

(1.) Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But ſome faint ſigns of feeble life appear. Dryden.
Not youthful kings in battle ſeiz'd alive,
Not ſcornful virgins who their charms ſurvive. Pope.

(2.) Thoſe good and learned men had reaſon to wiſh, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of ſuch as inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker.

(3.) She was not ſo much alive the whole day, if ſhe ſlept more than ſix hours. Clariſſa.

(4.) And to thoſe brethren ſaid, riſe, riſe by-live,
And unto battle do yourſelves addreſs;
For yonder comes the proweſt knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobleneſs. Fairy Q.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudeſt man alive, could not look upon the deſtruction of monarchy with any pleaſure. Clarendon.

John was quick and underſtood buſineſs, but no man alive was more careleſs in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot.

Alkale'scent. adj. [from alkali.] That which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkaleſcent or anti-acid. Arbuthnot.

القالي

A'LKALI. n. ſ. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali; by us glaſſwort. This herb they burnt to aſhes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white ſalt; this they called ſal kali, or alkali. It is corroſive, producing putrefaction in animal ſubſtances, to which it is applied. Arbuth. on Alim.] Any ſubſtance, which, when mingled with acid, produces efferveſcence and fermentation.

A'lkaline. adj. [from alcali.] That which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquour will keep an animal from ſtarving very long, by diluting the fluids, and conſequently keeping them from an alkaline ſtate. People have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot.

To Alka'lizate. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

Alka'lizate. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali; that which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that, which it diſcovers, being diſſolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizate ſalts. Boyle.

The colour of violets in their ſyrup, by acid liquours, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizate, turns green. Newton.

Alkaliza'tion. n. ſ. [from alkali.] The act of alkalizating, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

A'lkanet. n. ſ. [Anchuſa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

——— Nought's had, all's ſpent,
Where our deſire is got without content. Shak. Macbeth.

The youth ſhall ſtudy, and no more engage
Their flatt'ring wiſhes for uncertain age;
No more with fruitleſs care, and cheated ſtrife,
Chace fleeting pleaſure through the maze of life;
Finding the wretched all they here can have,
But preſent food, and but a future grave. Prior.

Our all is at ſtake, and irretrievably loſt, if we fail of ſucceſs. Addiſon.

(2.) Then ſhall we be news-cramm'd.—All the better; we ſhall be the more remarkable. Shakeſpeare.

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that. Shakeſp.

—— All the fitter, Lentulus: our coming
Is not for ſalutation; we have bus'neſs. Ben. Johnſon.

(3.) Sceptre and pow'r, thy giving I aſſume;
And glad her ſhall reſign, when in the end
Thou ſhalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me all whom thou lov'ſt. Milton.

They that do not keep up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured ſpectacles before their eyes, and look through falſe glaſſes. Locke.

(4.) They all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it ſo little foothold, that the firſt blaſt of wind laid it flat upon the ground, neſt, eagles, and all. L'Eſtrange.

To ALLA'Y. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage; it is therefore derived by ſome from à la loi, according to law; the quantity of metals being mixed according to law; by others, from allier, to unite; perhaps from allocare, to put together.] 1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this ſenſe, moſt authours preſerve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See Alloy. 2. To join any thing to another, ſo as to abate its predominant qualities. It is uſed commonly in a ſenſe contrary to its original meaning, and is, to make ſomething bad, leſs bad. To obtund; to repreſs; to abate. 3. To quiet; to pacify; to repreſs. The word, in this ſenſe, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer, but to be the Engliſh word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.

(2.) —— Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poiſon. Shakeſpeare.

No friendly offices ſhall alter or allay that rancour, that frets in ſome helliſh breaſts, which, upon all occaſions, will foam out at its foul mouth in ſlander and invective. South.

(3.) ———— If by your art, you have
Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shakeſpeare.

Alla'y. n. ſ. [alloy, Fr.] 1. The metal of a baſer kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear leſs. Gold is allayed with ſilver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; ſilver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowel thinks the allay is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done only by making the coin leſs. 2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the ſame manner, as the admixture of baſer metals allay the qualities of the firſt maſs. 3. Allay being taken from baſer metals, commonly implies ſomething worſe than that with which it is mixed.

(1.) For fools are ſtubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras.

(2.) Dark colours eaſily ſuffer a ſenſible allay, by little ſcattering light. Newton's Opticks.

(3.) ———— If by your art, you have
Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shakeſpeare.

ALLA'Y. n. ſ. [alloy, Fr.] 1. The metal of a baſer kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear leſs. Gold is allayed with ſilver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; ſilver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowel thinks the allay is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done only by making the coin leſs. 2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the ſame manner, as the admixture of baſer metals allay the qualities of the firſt maſs. 3. Allay being taken from baſer metals, commonly implies ſomething worſe than that with which it is mixed.

(1.) For fools are ſtubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras.

(2.) Dark colours eaſily ſuffer a ſenſible allay, by little ſcattering light. Newton's Opticks.

ALLA'YER. n. ſ. [from allay.] The perſon or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony; and Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies; becauſe he eſteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceneſs. Harvey.

ALLA'YMENT. n. ſ. [from allay.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.

If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate.
The like allayment would I give my grief. Shakeſp.

ALLEGA'TION. n. ſ. [from allege.] 1. Affirmation; declaration. 2. The thing alleged or affirmed. 3. An excuſe; a plea.

(2.) Hath he not twit our ſovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly coucht?
As if ſhe had ſuborned ſome to ſwear
Falſe allegations, to o'erthrow his ſtate. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

(3.) I omitted no means to be informed of my errours; and I expect not to be excuſed in any negligence on account of youth, want of leiſure, or any other idle allegations. Pope.

To ALLEGE. v. a. [allego, Lat.] 1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain. 2. To plead as an excuſe, or produce as an argument.

ALLE'GER. n. ſ. [from allege.] He that alleges.

The narrative, if we believe it as confidently as the famous alleger of it, Pamphilio, appears to do, would argue, that there is no other principle requiſite, than what may reſult from the lucky mixture of ſeveral bodies. Boyle.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. ſ. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of ſubjects to the government. fidelite'

————I did pluck allegiance from mens hearts,
Loud ſhouts and ſalutations from their mouths,
Even in the preſence of the crown'd king. Shakeſp.

We charge you on allegiance to ourſelves,
To hold your ſlaught'ring hands, and keep the peace. Shakeſpeare.

The houſe of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the ſeveral counties of England, profeſſing all allegiance to them, govern abſolutely; the lords concurring, or rather ſubmitting to whatſoever is propoſed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word not now uſed. fidel

My pray'rs to heav'n for you. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

ALLEGO'RICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I diſcern not. Milton.

ALLEGO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; myſtical.

When our Saviour ſaid, in an allegorical and myſtical ſenſe, Except ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you: the hearers underſtood him literally and groſsly. Bentley.

The epithet of Apollo for ſhooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in reſpect of the darts and bow, the enſigns of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the ſun. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the meſſenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham.

The place is to be underſtood allegorically; and what is thus ſpoken by a Phæacian with wiſdom, is, by the Poet, applied to the goddeſs of it. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALNESS. n. ſ. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Dict.

To A'LLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a ſenſe not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his ſuppoſition of the tree itſelf to be true. Raleigh.

As ſome would allegorize theſe ſigns, ſo others would confine them to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Burnet's Theory.

An alchymiſt ſhall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by ſal, ſulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the ſcripture itſelf, and the ſacred myſteries thereof into the philoſopher's ſtone. Locke.

ALLEGORY. n. ſ. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative diſcourſe, in which ſomething other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither muſt we draw out our allegory too long, leſt either we we make ourſelves obſcure, or fall into affectation, which is childiſh. Ben. Johnſon.

This word nympha meant nothing elſe but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moiſture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

A'lmanack n. ſ. [Derived, by ſome, from the Arabick, al, and manah, Heb. to count, or compute; but others, from al, Arabick, and μήν, a month, or μανακὸς, the courſe of the months; by others from a Teutonick original, al, and maan, the moon, an account of every moon, or month: all of them are probable.] A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the ſeaſons, with the return of feaſts and faſts, is noted for the enſuing year.

It will be ſaid, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well; Spain hath not aſſailed this kingdom. Bacon.

This aſtrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inverſion of the common prognoſticators. Government of the Tongue.

Beware the woman too, and ſhun her ſight,
Who in theſe ſtudies does herſelf delight;
By whom a greaſy almanack is borne,
With often handling like chaft amber worn. Dryden.
I'll have a faſting almanack printed on purpoſe for her uſe. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A'LMANDINE. n. ſ. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby coarſer and lighter than the oriental, and near the colour of the granate. Dict.

ALMI'GHTINESS. n. ſ. [from almighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It ſerveth to the world for a witneſs of his almightineſs, whom we outwardly honour with the chiefeſt of outward things. Hooker.

In creating and making exiſtent the world univerſal, by the abſolute act of his own word, God ſhewed his power, and almightineſs. Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderneſs, the bittern and the ſtork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his proviſions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightineſs. Taylor.

ALMI'GHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abraham and ſaid unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. Geneſis, xvii. 1.

He wills you in the name of God almighty,
That you diveſt yourſelf, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heav'n,
By law of nature and of nations 'long,
To him and to his heirs. Shakeſp.

A'LMOND. n. ſ. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin; by others, from Allemand, a German; ſuppoſing that almonds come to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond tree, either ſweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the ſweet taſte into an oily one. Locke.

A'LMOND TREE. n. ſ. [amygdalus, Lat.] It has leaves and flowers very like thoſe of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compreſſed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the ſhell is not ſo rugged. Miller.

Like to an almond tree, mounted high
On top of green Selinis all alone,
With bloſſoms brave bedecked daintily,
Whoſe tender locks do tremble every one,
At every little breath that under heav'n is blown. Fairy Q.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will anſwer to the ſylvan reign;
Great heats will follow and large crops of grain. Dryden.

A'LMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly Almonds of the ears; are two round glands placed on the ſides of the baſis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces; each of them has a large oval ſinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of leſſer ones, which diſcharge themſelves through the great ſinus of a mucous and ſlippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œſophagus, for the moiſtening and lubricating thoſe parts. When the œſophagus muſcle acts, it compreſſes the almonds, and they frequently are the occaſion of a ſore throat. Quincy.

The tonſils, or Almonds of the Ears, are alſo frequently ſwelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a ſpecies of it. Wiſem. Surgery.

A'LMOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE, called alſo the Sweep, is a peculiar kind of furnace uſed in refining, to ſeparate metals from cinders and other foreign ſubſtances. Chambers.

A'LMONER, or ALMNER. n. ſ. [eleemoſynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other perſon, employed in the diſtribution of charity.

A'LMONRY. n. ſ. [from almoner.] The place where the almoner reſides, or where the alms are diſtributed.

ALMO'ST. adv. [from all and moſt; that is, moſt part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole, or to univerſality.

Who is there almoſt, whoſe mind, at ſome time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not ſo faſtened to ſome clog, that it could not turn itſelf to any other object. Locke.

There can be no ſuch thing or notion, as an almoſt infinite; there can be nothing next or ſecond to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Serm.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight,
And almoſt faints beneath the glowing weight. Addiſon.

ALMS. n. ſ. [in Saxon, elmeꞅ, from eleemoſyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitouſly in relief of the poor. It has no ſingular.

——————My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my ſtirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms. Shakeſp.

The poor beggar hath a juſt demand of an alms from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injuſtice and oppreſſion, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

ALMS-BASKET. n. ſ. [from alms and baſket.] The baſket in which proviſions are put to be given away.

There ſweepings do as well,
As the beſt order'd meal;
For who the reliſh of theſe gueſts will fit,
Needs ſet them but the alms-baſket of wit. Ben. Johnſon.

We'll ſtand up for our properties, was the beggar's ſong that lived upon the alm's-baſket. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

A'LMSDEED. n. ſ. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds which ſhe did. Acts, ix. 36.

Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioner for blood thou ne'er put'ſt back. Shakeſp.

ALMS-GIVER. n. ſ. [from alms and giver.] He that gives alms; he that ſupports others by his charity.

He endowed many religious foundations, and yet was he a great alms-giver in ſecret, which ſhewed that his works in publick were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own. Bacon.

A'LMSHOUSE. n. ſ. [from alms and houſe.] A houſe devoted to the reception and ſupport of the poor; an hoſpital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of almshouſes for the poor, and the ſorting out of the people into pariſhes, are manifeſt. Hooker.

And to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint ſouls, paſt corporal toil,
A hundred almshouſes right well ſupplied. Shakeſp.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples, and other rapine, build an hoſpital, or almshouſe, out of the ruins of the church, and the ſpoils of widows and orphans. L'Eſtrange.

Behold yon almshouſe, neat, but void of ſtate,
Where age and want ſit ſmiling at the gate. Pope.

A'LMSMAN. n. ſ. [from alms and man.] A man who lives upon alms; who is ſupported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a ſet of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown. Shakeſp.

A'LMUG-TREE. n. ſ. A tree mentioned in ſcripture.

Of its wood were made muſical inſtruments, and it was uſed alſo in rails, or in a ſtaircaſe. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brazil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is tranſlated wrought wood, and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina. But coral could never anſwer the purpoſes of the almugim; the pine-tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir; and the Thyinum, or citron-tree, much eſteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or, ſimply, gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be underſtood oily and gummy ſorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is, perhaps, the ſame with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moſes. Calmet.

And the navy alſo of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees. 1 Kings, x. 11.

A'LNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LNEGER. n. ſ. [from alnage.] A meaſurer by the ell; a ſworn officer, whoſe buſineſs formerly was to inſpect the aſſize of woollen cloth, and to fix the ſeals appointed upon it for that purpoſe; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the ſearcher, meaſurer, and algener. Dict.

A'LNAGE. n. ſ. [from aulnage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-meaſure, or rather the meaſuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. ſ. [from all and night.]

A ſervice which they call alnight, is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midſt; whereby it cometh to paſs, that the wick fetcheth the nouriſhment farther off. Bacon.

A'LOES. n. ſ. [אחלם, as it is ſuppoſed.] A term applied to three different things. 1. A precious wood uſed, in the Eaſt, for perfumes, of which the beſt ſort is of higher price than gold, and was the moſt valuable preſent given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tambac, and is the heart, or innermoſt part, of the aloetree; the next part to which is called Calembac, which is ſometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferiour value to the Tambac, is much eſteemed: the part next the bark is termed, by the Portugueſe, Pao d' aquila, or eagle-wood; but ſome account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another ſpecies. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savary. 2. Aloes is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain. 3. Aloes is a medicinal juice extracted not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves, and expoſing the juice that drops from them to the ſun. It is diſtinguiſhed into Socotorine and Caballine, or horſe aloes; the firſt is ſo called from Socotora; the ſecond, becauſe, being coarſer, it ought to be confined to the uſe of farriers. It is a warm and ſtrong cathartick.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Conſiſting chiefly of aloes.

A'ltitude. n. ſ. [altitudo, Lat.] 1. Height of place, ſpace meaſuring upward. 2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon. 3 Situation with regard to lower things. 4 Height of excellence; ſuperiority. 5. Height of degree; higheſt point.

(1.) Ten maſts attach'd make not the altitude,
Which thou haſt perpendicularly fall'n. Shakeſp.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the higheſt mountains to be four miles; others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.

She ſhines above, we know, but in what place,
How near the throne, and heav'ns imperial face,
By our weak opticks is but vainly gueſs'd;
Diſtance and altitude conceal the reſt. Dryd.

(2.) Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much conſiderable, whether we conſider its aſcent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he obſerve them and their influences in their oppoſitions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depreſſions? Rymer.

(3.) Thoſe members which are pairs, ſtand by one another in equal altitude, and anſwer on each ſide one to another. Ray.

(4.) Your altitude offends the eyes
Of thoſe who want the power to riſe. Swift.

(1.) It is in vain to ſpeak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till the people be altogether ſubdued. Spen. State of Irel.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to ſuffer for his conſcience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as abſurd to imagine a man obliged to ſuffer, as to do impoſſibilities. South.

I do not altogether diſapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of ſcripture through the ſtyle of your ſermon. Swift.

(2.) Couſin of Somerſet, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoiſt duke Humphry from his ſeat. Shakeſp.

A'LUDEL. n. ſ. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]

Aludels are ſubliming pots uſed in chemiſtry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occaſion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be ſublimed; and, at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that riſe up. Quincy.

A'LUM. n. ſ. [alumen, Lat.]

A kind of mineral ſalt, of an acid taſte, leaving in the mouth a ſenſe of ſweetneſs, accompanied with a conſiderable degree of aſtringency. The ancient naturaliſts allow of two ſorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the iſland of Milo being a kind of whitiſh ſtone, very light, friable, and porous, and ſtreaked with filaments reſembling ſilver. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the Engliſh roche-alum is made from a bluiſh mineral ſtone, in the hills of Yorkſhire and Lancaſhire.

Saccharine alum is a compoſition of common alum, with roſewater and whites of eggs boiled together, to the conſiſtence of a paſte, and thus moulded at pleaſure. As it cools, it grows hard as a ſtone.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire.

Plumoſe or plume alum is a ſort of ſaline mineral ſtone, of various colours, moſt commonly white, bordering on green; it riſes in threads or fibres, reſembling thoſe of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Chambers.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the moſt part, into white curds. Boyle.

Alum stone. n. ſ. A ſtone or calx uſed in ſurgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corroſive.

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in few days cured, by touching it with the vitrol and alum ſtones. Wiſeman.

Alu'minous. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or conſiſting of alum.

Nor do we reaſonably conclude, becauſe, by a cold and aluminous moiſture, it is able a while to reſiſt the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it ſubſiſteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wiſeman's Surg.

A'lways. adv. [It is ſometimes written alway, compounded of all and way; ealleƿæʒa, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.] 1. Perpetually; throughout all time; oppoſed to ſometime, or to never. 2. Conſtantly; without variation: oppoſed to ſometimes, or to now and then.

(1.) That, which ſometime is expedient, doth not always ſo continue. Hooker.

Man never is, but always to be bleſt. Pope.

(2.) He is always great, when ſome great occaſion is preſented to him. Dryden.

A. M. Stands for artium magiſter, or maſter of arts; the ſecond degree of our univerſities, which, in ſome foreign countries, is called doctor of philoſophy.

Am. The firſt perſon of the verb to be. [See To Be.]

And God ſaid unto Moſes, I am that I am: and he ſaid, thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the children of Iſrael, I am hath ſent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my ſoul: I call thee by that name,
Thou buſy thing, from whence I know I am:
For knowing that I am, I know thou art;
Since that muſt needs exiſt, which can impart. Prior.

Amabi'lity. n. ſ. [from amabilis, Lat.] Lovelineſs; the power of pleaſing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehenſions make that; and ſo is our felicity. Taylor.

A'MADETTO. n. ſ. A ſort of pear [See Pear.] ſo called, ſays Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A'MADOT. n. ſ. A ſort of pear. [See Pear.]

Ama'in. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is uſed of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To ſignify that rebels there are up. Shakeſp.

What! when we fled amain, purſued, and ſtruck
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and beſought
The deep to ſhelter us? Milton.

————The hills, to their ſupply,
Vapour and exhalation duſk and moiſt,
Sent up amain. Milton.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and ſprung amain,
Like light'ning, ſudden, on the warriour train,
Beats down the trees before him, ſhakes the ground;
The foreſt echoes to the crackling ſound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around. Dryden.

AMA'LGAM. }
AMA'LGAMA. } n. ſ. [ἅμα and γαμεῖν.] The mixture of metals procured by amalgamation. See Amalgamation.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture reſulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

To Ama'lgamate. v. a. [from amalgam.] To unite metals with quickſilver, which may be practiſed upon all metals, except iron and copper. The uſe of this operation is, to make the metal ſoft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

Amalgama'tion. n. ſ. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the reſt are anſwerable: Take ſix parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible; ſtir theſe well that they may incorporate; then caſt the maſs into cold water, and waſh it. Bacon.

Amanda'tion. n. ſ. [from amando, Lat.] The act of ſending on a meſſage or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS. n. ſ. [Lat.] A perſon who writes what another dictates.

A'maranth. n. ſ. [amaranthus, Lat. from α and μαραίνω.] The name of a plant. The flowers have no petals; the cup of the flower is dry and multifid; the ſeeds are included in membranaceous veſſels, which, when come to maturity, burſt open tranſverſely or horizontally, like purſlane, each of which contains one or more roundiſh ſeeds. Among the many ſpecies, the moſt beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous amaranth, with reddiſh coloured ſeeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding. In poetry, it is ſometimes an imaginary flower, ſuppoſed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
In paradiſe, faſt by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but ſoon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where firſt it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, ſhading the fount of life;
And where the river of bliſs, thro' midſt of heav'n,
Rowls o'er Elyſian flow'rs her amber ſtream:

With theſe, that never fade, the ſpirits elect
Bind their reſplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams.
Milton's Par. Loſt.

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; conſiſting of amaranths.

By the ſtreams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elyſian flow'rs,
By thoſe happy ſouls that dwell
In yellow meads of Aſphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs. Pope.

AMA'RITUDE. n. ſ. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterneſs.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies. Harvey on Conſumptions.

AMA'RULENCE. n. ſ. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterneſs. Dict.

AMA'SMENT. n. ſ. [from amaſs.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now, is but an amaſment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impoſtures. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amaſſer, Fr.] 1. To collect together in one heap or maſs. 2. In a figurative ſenſe, to add one thing to another, generally with ſome ſhare of reproach, either of eagerneſs or indiſcrimination.

(1.) The rich man is not blamed, as having made uſe of any unlawful means to amaſs riches, as having thriven by fraud and injuſtice. Atterbury's Serm.

When we would think of infinite ſpace, or duration, we, at firſt ſtep, uſually make ſome very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which poſſibly we double and multiply ſeveral times. All that we thus amaſs together in our thoughts, is poſitive, and the aſſemblage of a great number of poſitive ideas of ſpace or duration. Locke.

(2.) Such as amaſs all relations, muſt err in ſome, and be unbelieved in many. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Do not content yourſelves with mere words, leſt your improvements only amaſs a heap of unintelligible phraſes. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amaſſing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a ſtory of him to the world. Pope.

AMA'SS. n. ſ. [amas, Fr.] An aſſemblage; an accumulation.

This pillar is but a medley or amaſs of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by ſtealth. Wotton.

To AMA'TE. v. n. [from a and mate. See MATE.] 1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obſolete. 2. To terrify; to ſtrike with horrour. In this ſenſe, it is derived from the old French, matter, to cruſh or ſubdue.

(1.) A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them in modeſt wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Qu.

AMATO'RCULIST. n. ſ. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little inſignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'MATORY. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; cauſing love.

It is the ſame thing whether one raviſh Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions, not only allure her, but neceſſitate her to ſatiſfy his luſt, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably to follow him ſpontaneouſly. Bramham againſt Hobbes.

AMAURO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀμαυρόω.] A dimneſs of ſight, not from any viſible defect in the eye, but from ſome diſtemperature of the inner parts, occaſioning the repreſentations of flies and duſt floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compreſſed by the blood veſſels being too much diſtended; ſo that, in many of its parts, all ſenſe is loſt; and therefore no images can be painted upon them, whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling ſucceſſively upon them, are obſcure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the ſtagnations in the extremities of thoſe arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.] 1. To confuſe with terrour. 2. To put into confuſion with wonder. 3. To put into perplexity.

(1.) Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings ſhall be horribly afraid for thee, when I ſhall brandiſh my ſword before them, and they ſhall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezekiel.

(2.) Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazzling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

(3.) That cannot chooſe but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakeſp.

AMA'ZE. n. ſ. [from the verb amaze.] Aſtoniſhment; confuſion, either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whoſe name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praiſe,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze. Milton.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage thro' the curling ſea,
Then caſting back his eyes with dire amaze,
Sees on the Punick ſhore, the mounting blaze. Dryden.

AMA'ZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confuſedly; with amazement; with confuſion.

I ſpeak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my meſſage. Shakeſp.

Stands Macbeth thus amazedly!
Come, ſiſters, cheer we up his ſprights. Shakeſp.

AMA'ZEDNESS. n. ſ. [from amazed.] The ſtate of being amazed; aſtoniſhment; wonder; confuſion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old ſhepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedneſs, we were all commanded out of the chamber. Shakeſp.

AMA'ZEMENT. n. ſ. [from amaze.] 1. Such a confuſed apprehenſion as does not leave reaſon its full force; extreme fear; horrour. 2. Extreme dejection. 3. Height of admiration. 4. Aſtoniſhment; wonder at an unexpected event.

(1.) He anſwer'd nought at all; but adding new
Fear to his firſt amazement, ſtaring wide,
With ſtony eyes, and heartleſs hollow hue,
Aſtoniſh'd ſtood, as one that had eſpy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother ſits;
O ſtep between her and her fighting ſoul:
Conceit in weakeſt bodies ſtrongeſt works. Shakeſp.

(2.) He ended, and his words impreſſion left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Diſtracted and ſurpris'd with deep diſmay
At theſe ſad tidings. Milton.

(3.) Had you, ſome ages paſt, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we ſhould read your ſtory;
But living virtue, all atchievements paſt,
Meets envy ſtill to grapple with at laſt. Waller.

(4.) They knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts.

AMA'ZING. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; aſtoniſhing.

It is an amazing thing to ſee the preſent deſolation of Italy, when one conſiders what incredible multitudes of people it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperours. Addiſon.

AMA'ZINGLY adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite aſtoniſhment; wonderfully.

If we ariſe to the world of ſpirits, our knowledge of them muſt be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the leaſt grain of ſand but has too many difficulties belonging to it, for the wiſeſt philoſpher to anſwer. Watts's Log.

A'MAZON. n. ſ. [α and μαζὸς.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucaſus; they are ſo called from their cutting off their breaſts, to uſe their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, ſtay thy hands, thou art an amazon,
And fighteſt with the ſword. Shakeſp.

Amara'nthine. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; conſiſting of amaranths.

By the ſtreams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elyſian flow'rs,
By thoſe happy ſouls that dwell
In yellow meads of Aſphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs. Pope.

Ama'ritude. n. ſ. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterneſs.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies. Harvey on Conſumptions.

Ama'rulence. n. ſ. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterneſs. Dict.

Ama'sment. n. ſ. [from amaſs.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now, is but an amaſment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impoſtures. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amaſſer, Fr.] 1. To collect together in one heap or maſs. 2. In a figurative ſenſe, to add one thing to another, generally with ſome ſhare of reproach, either of eagerneſs or indiſcrimination.

(1.) The rich man is not blamed, as having made uſe of any unlawful means to amaſs riches, as having thriven by fraud and injuſtice. Atterbury's Serm.

When we would think of infinite ſpace, or duration, we, at firſt ſtep, uſually make ſome very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which poſſibly we double and multiply ſeveral times. All that we thus amaſs together in our thoughts, is poſitive, and the aſſemblage of a great number of poſitive ideas of ſpace or duration. Locke.

(2.) Such as amaſs all relations, muſt err in ſome, and be unbelieved in many. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Do not content yourſelves with mere words, leſt your improvements only amaſs a heap of unintelligible phraſes. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amaſſing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a ſtory of him to the world. Pope.

Ama'ss n. ſ. [amas, Fr.] An aſſemblage; an accumulation.

This pillar is but a medley or amaſs of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by ſtealth. Wotton.

To Ama'te. v. n. [from a and mate. See Mate.] 1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obſolete. 2. To terrify; to ſtrike with horrour. In this ſenſe, it is derived from the old French, matter, to cruſh or ſubdue.

(1.) A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them in modeſt wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Qu.

Amato'rculist. n. ſ. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little inſignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'matory. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; cauſing love.

It is the ſame thing whether one raviſh Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions, not only allure her, but neceſſitate her to ſatisfy his luſt, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably to follow him ſpontaneouſly. Bramham againſt Hobbes.

AMAURO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀμαυρόω.] A dimneſs of ſight, not from any viſible defect in the eye, but from ſome diſtemperature of the inner parts, occaſioning the repreſentations of flies and duſt floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compreſſed by the blood veſſels being too much diſtended; ſo that, in many of its parts, all ſenſe is loſt; and therefore no images can be painted upon them, whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling ſucceſſively upon them, are obſcure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the ſtagnations in the extremities of thoſe arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.] 1. To confuſe with terrour. 2. To put into confuſion with wonder. 3. To put into perplexity.

(1.) Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings ſhall be horribly afraid for thee, when I ſhall brandiſh my ſword before them, and they ſhall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezekiel.

(2.) Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazzling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

(3.) That cannot chooſe but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakeſp.

Ama'ze. n. ſ. [from the verb amaze.] Aſtoniſhment; confuſion, either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whoſe name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praiſe,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze. Milton.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage thro' the curling ſea,
Then caſting back his eyes with dire amaze,
Sees on the Punick ſhore, the mounting blaze. Dryden.

Ama'zedly. adv. [from amazed.] Confuſedly; with amazement; with confuſion.

I ſpeak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my meſſage. Shakeſp.

Stands Macbeth thus amazedly!
Come, ſiſters, cheer we up his ſprights. Shakeſp.

Ama'zedness. n. ſ. [from amazed.] The ſtate of being amazed; aſtoniſhment; wonder; confuſion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old ſhepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedneſs, we were all commanded out of the chamber. Shakeſp.

Ama'zement. n. ſ. [from amaze.] 1. Such a confuſed apprehenſion as does not leave reaſon its full force; extreme fear; horrour. 2. Extreme dejection. 3. Height of admiration. 4. Aſtoniſhment; wonder at an unexpected event.

(1.) He anſwer'd nought at all; but adding new
Fear to his firſt amazement, ſtaring wide,
With ſtony eyes, and heartleſs hollow hue,
Aſtoniſh'd ſtood, as one that had eſpy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother ſits;
O ſtep between her and her fighting ſoul:
Conceit in weakeſt bodies ſtrongeſt works. Shakeſp.

(2.) He ended, and his words impreſſion left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Diſtracted and ſurpris'd with deep diſmay
At theſe ſad tidings. Milton.

(3.) Had you, ſome ages paſt, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we ſhould read your ſtory;
But living virtue, all atchievements paſt,
Meets envy ſtill to grapple with at laſt. Waller.

(4.) They knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts.

Ama'zing. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; aſtoniſhing.

It is an amazing thing to ſee the preſent deſolation of Italy, when one conſiders what incredible multitudes of people it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperours. Addiſon.

Ama'zingly adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite aſtoniſhment; wonderfully.

If we ariſe to the world of ſpirits, our knowledge of them muſt be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the leaſt grain of ſand but has too many difficulties belonging to it, for the wiſeſt philoſpher to anſwer. Watts's Log.

A'MAZON. n. ſ. [α and μάζος.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucaſus; they are ſo called from their cutting off their breaſts, to uſe their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, ſtay thy hands, thou art an amazon,
And fighteſt with the ſword. Shakeſp.

AMBA'GES. n. ſ. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of ſpeech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expreſſion.

They gave thoſe complex ideas names, that they might the more eaſily record and diſcourſe of things they were daily converſant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things, they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the eaſier and quicker underſtood. Locke.

AMBA'GIOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious. Dict.

AMBASSA'DE. n. ſ. [ambaſſade, Fr.] Embaſſy; character or buſineſs of an ambaſſador: a word not now in uſe.

When you diſgraced me in my ambaſſade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakeſp.

AMBA'SSADOUR. n. ſ. [ambaſſadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span. It is written differently, as it is ſuppoſed to come from the French or Spaniſh language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not eaſy to ſettle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew, בשר, to tell, and מבשר, a meſſenger; others from ambactus, which in the old Gauliſh, ſignified a ſervant; whence ambaſcia, in low Latin, is found to ſignify ſervice, and ambaſciator, a ſervant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old Teutonick, ſignifying a government, and Junius mentions a poſſibility of its deſcent from ἀναβάινω, and others from am for ad, and baſſus, low, as ſuppoſing the act of ſending an ambaſſadour, to be in ſome ſort an act of ſubmiſſion. All theſe derivations lead to write ambaſſadour, not embaſſadour.] A perſon ſent in a publick manner from one ſovereign power to another, and ſuppoſed to repreſent the power from which he is ſent. The perſon of an ambaſſadour is inviolable.

Ambaſſadour is, in popular language, the general name of a meſſenger from a ſovereign power, and ſometimes, ludicrouſly, from common perſons. In the juridical and formal language, it ſignifies particularly a miniſter of the higheſt rank reſiding in another country, and is diſtinguiſhed from an envoy, who is of leſs dignity.

Give firſt admittance to th' ambaſſadours. Shakeſp.

Rais'd by theſe hopes, I ſent no news before,
Nor aſk'd you leave, nor did your faith implore;
But come, without a pledge, my own ambaſſadour. Dryd.

Oft have their black ambaſſadours appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and filled the courts of Zama. Addiſ.

AMBA'SSADRESS. n. ſ. [ambaſſadrice, Fr.] 1. The lady of an ambaſſadour. 2. In ludicrous language, a woman ſent on a meſſage.

(2.) Well, my ambaſſadreſs————
Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe.

A'MBASSAGE. n. ſ. [from ambaſſadour.] An embaſſy; the buſineſs of an ambaſſadour.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory anſwers; ſo as the formal part of their ambaſſage might well warrant their further ſtay. Bacon.

A'MBER. n. ſ. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers formed ambarum.] A yellow tranſparent ſubſtance of a gummous or bituminous conſiſtence, but a reſinous taſte, and a ſmell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick ſea, along the coaſts of Pruſſia. Some naturaliſts refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and ſome even to the animal kingdom. Pliny deſcribes it as a reſinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and diſcharged thence into the ſea. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of ſuccinum, from ſuccus, juice. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beaſt; others, the ſcum of the lake Cephiſis, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in ſome fountains, where it is found ſwimming like pitch. Others ſuppoſe it a bitumen trickling into the ſea from ſubterraneous ſources; but this opinion is alſo diſcarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea, as that gathered on the coaſt. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatick plants, elaborated by heat into a cryſtalline form. Within ſome pieces of amber have been found leaves, and inſects included; which ſeems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid ſtate, or, that having been expoſed to the ſun, it was ſoftened, and rendered ſuſceptible of the leaves and inſects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiouſly in the dark. Some diſtinguiſh amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are ſuppoſed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. Trevoux. Chambers.

Liquid amber, is a kind of native balſam or reſin, like turpentine; clear, reddiſh, or yellowiſh; of a pleaſant ſmell, almoſt like ambergris. It flows from an inciſion made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives oſoſol. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glaſs, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar ſhade;
But poplar wreathes around his temples ſpread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addiſon.

The ſpoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And ſtudded amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER. adj. Conſiſting of amber.

With ſcarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakeſp.

AMBER DRINK. n. ſ. Drink of the colour of amber, or reſembling amber in colour and tranſparency.

All your clear amber drink is flat. Bacon.

A'MBERGRIS. n. ſ. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.] A fragrant drug, that melts almoſt like wax, commonly of a greyiſh or aſh colour, uſed both as a perfume and a cordial. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the ſun, and waſhed off the ſhore by the waves, is ſwallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fiſh, becauſe ſometimes found in the inteſtines of ſuch animals. But we have no inſtance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it ſhould rather be found where theſe animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which diſtils from trees, and drops into the ſea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it ſprings out of the ſea, as naphtha does out of ſome fountains. Others aſſert it to be a vegetable production, iſſuing out of the root of a tree, whoſe roots always ſhoot towards the ſea, and diſcharge themſelves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the ſea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their neſts; ſeveral perſons having ſeen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Neuman abſolutely denies it to be an animal ſubſtance, as not yielding in the analyſis, any one animal principle. He concludes it to be a bitumen iſſuing out of the earth into the ſea; at firſt of a viſcous conſiſtence, but hardening, by its mixture with ſome liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Burmudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy iſland, where huge lemons grow,
Where ſhining pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich ſhore of ambergris is found. Waller.

Amber seed, or muſk-ſeed, reſembles millet, is of a bitteriſh taſte, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. Chambers.

Amber tree. n. ſ. [frutex Africanus ambram ſpirans.] A ſhrub, whoſe beauty is in its ſmall evergreen leaves, which grow as cloſe as heath, and, being bruiſed between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Miller.

AMBIDE'XTER. n. ſ. [Lat.] 1. A man who has equally the uſe of both his hands. 2. A man who is equally ready to act on either ſide, in party diſputes. This ſenſe is ludicrous.

(1.) Rodiginus, undertaking to give a reaſon of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown.

Ambidexte'rity. n. ſ. [from ambidexter.] 1. The quality of being able equally to uſe both hands. 2. Double dealing.

Ambide'xtrous. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.] 1. Having, with equal facility, the uſe of either hand. 2. Double dealing; practiſing on both ſides.

(2.) Æſop condemns the double practices of trimmers and all falſe, ſhuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Eſtrange.

Ambide'xtrousness. n. ſ. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dict.

A'mbient. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompaſſing; inveſting.

———This which yields or fills
All ſpace, the ambient air wide interfus'd. Milton.

The thickneſs of a plate requiſite to produce any colour, depends only on the denſity of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the roſy hours,
And damaſking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient ſweets perfume the morn. Fenton to L. Gower.

Illuſtrious virtues, who by turns have roſe,
With happy laws her empire to ſuſtain,
And with full pow'r, aſſert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley.

A'MBIGU. n. ſ. [French.] An entertainment, conſiſting not of regular courſes, but of a medley of diſhes ſet on together.

When ſtraiten'd in your time, and ſervants few,
You'd richly then compoſe an ambigu;
Where firſt and ſecond courſe, and your deſert,
All in one ſingle table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

Ambigu'ity. n. ſ. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulneſs of meaning; uncertainty of ſignification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themſelves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itſelf, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker.

———We can clear theſe ambiguities,
And know their ſpring, their head, their true deſcent. Shakeſp.

The words are of ſingle ſignification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I ſhall not trouble you, by ſtraining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or diſtinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBI'GUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.] 1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain ſignification. 2. Applied to perſons uſing doubtful expreſſions. It is applied to expreſſions, or thoſe that uſe them, not to a dubious, or ſuſpended ſtate of mind.

(1.) But what have been thy anſwers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with doubtful ſenſe deluding. Milton.

Some expreſſions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left ſo; becauſe the perſons who framed them, were not all of one mind. Clarendon.

(2.) Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breaſt,
In theſe myſterious words his mind expreſt;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the reſt. Dryden.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Conſtrain'd a ſmile, and thus ambiguous ſpoke. Pope.

Ambi'guously. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

Ambi'guousness. n. ſ. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of ſignification.

Ambi'logy. n. ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and λόγος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful ſignification. Dict.

Ambi'loquous. adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Uſing ambiguous and doubtful expreſſions. Dict.

Ambi'loquy. n. ſ. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The uſe of doubtful and indeterminate expreſſions; diſcourſe of doubtful meaning. Dict.

A'mbit. n. ſ. [ambitus, Lat.] The compaſs or circuit of any thing; the line that encompaſſes any thing.

The tuſk of a wild boar winds about almoſt into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In meaſuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its baſis an inch over. Grew's Muſæum.

Ambi'tion. n. ſ. [ambitio, Lat. The deſire of ſomething higher than is poſſeſſed at preſent.] 1. The deſire of preferment or honour. 2. The deſire of any thing great or excellent. 3. It is uſed with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

(1.) Who would think, without having ſuch a mind as Antiphilus, that ſo great goodneſs could not have bound gratefulneſs? and ſo high advancement not have ſatisfied his ambition? Sidney.

(2.) The quick'ning power would be, and ſo would reſt;
The ſenſe would not be only, but be well:
But wit's ambition longeth to the beſt,
For it deſires in endleſs bliſs to dwell. Davies.

———Urge them, while their ſouls
Are capable of this ambition;
Leſt zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of ſoft petitions, pity and remorſe,
Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shakeſp.

(3.) I had a very early ambition to recommend myſelf to your Lordſhip's patronage. Addiſon.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Pref. to his Let.

Ambi'tious. adj. [ambitioſus, Lat.] 1. Seized or touched with ambition; deſirous of advancement; eager of honours; aſpiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition, if a noun; to if expreſſed by a verb. 2. Eager to grow bigger; aſpiring.

(1.) We ſeem ambitious God's whole work t'undo. Donne.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Contend in crouds, ambitious of thy bed:
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canſt not chooſe alone. Dryden.

You have been pleaſed not to ſuffer an old man to go diſcontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been ſo long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, deſcended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, ſeeing a veſſel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbuthn. on Coins.

(2.)———I have ſeen
Th' ambitious ocean ſwell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threat'ning clouds. Shakeſp.

Ambi'tiously. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerneſs of advancement or preference.

With ſuch glad hearts did our deſpairing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiouſly would claim the ken,
That with firſt eyes did diſtant ſafety meet. Dryden.
Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiouſly deſign'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

Ambi'tiousness. n. ſ. [from ambitious.] The quality of being ambitious.

A'mbitude. n. ſ. [ambio, Lat.] Compaſs; circuit; circumference. Dict.

To A'MBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.] 1. To move upon an amble. [See Amble.] 2. To move eaſily, without hard ſhocks, or ſhaking. 3. In a ludicrous ſenſe, to move with ſubmiſſion, and by direction; as, a horſe that ambles, uſes a gait not natural. 4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

(1.) It is good, on ſome occaſions, to enjoy as much of the preſent, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourſelves of the virtuoſo's ſaddle, which will be ſure to amble, when the world is upon the hardeſt trot. Dryden.

(2.) Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, becauſe he feels no pain; knowing no burthen of heavy tedious penury: him time ambles withal. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

(3.) A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering ſhe,
Shall make him amble on a goſſip's meſſage,
And take the diſtaff with a hand as patient,
As e'er did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore.

(4.) I am rudely ſtampt, and want love's majeſty,
To ſtrut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakeſpeare.

A'MBLE. n. ſ. [from to amble.] A pace or movement in which the horſe removes both his legs on one ſide; as, on the far ſide, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the ſame ſide at one time, whilſt the legs on the near ſide ſtand ſtill; and when the far legs are upon the ground, the near ſide removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far ſide ſtand ſtill. An amble is the firſt pace of young colts, but when they have ſtrength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-maſters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horſe may be put from a trot to a gallop without ſtopping; but cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a ſtop, which interrupts the juſtneſs of the manage. Farrier's Dict.

A'MBLER. n. ſ. [from to amble.] A horſe that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

A'MBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBRO'SIA. n. ſ. [αμβροσία.] 1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleaſing to the ſmell or taſte, is called ambroſia. 2. The name of a plant. It has male floſculous flowers, produced on ſeparate parts of the ſame plant from the fruit, having no viſible petals; the fruit which ſucceeds the female flowers, is ſhaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong ſeed in each. The ſpecies are, 1. The marine or ſea ambroſia. 2. Taller unſavoury ſea ambroſia. 3. The talleſt Canada ambroſia. Miller.

AMBRO'SIAL. adj. [from ambroſia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambroſia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God ſpake, ambroſial fragrance fill'd
All heaven, and in the bleſſed ſpirits elect
Senſe of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.

The gifts of heaven my following ſong purſues,
Aerial honey, and ambroſial dews. Dryden.

To fartheſt ſhores th' ambroſial ſpirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the ſkies. Pope.

A'MBRY. n. ſ. [a word corrupted from almonry.] 1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are diſtributed. 2. The place where plate, and utenſils for houſekeeping, are kept; alſo a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word ſtill uſed in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE. n ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; ſo called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by conſidering his own inſtance of caſting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Suppoſing the poſture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, ſuppoſing the figure of the table, and of the dice themſelves, ſuppoſing the meaſure of force applied, and ſuppoſing all other things which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary. Bramb. againſt Hobbes.

AMBULA'TION. n. ſ. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and inviſible motion of the muſcles in ſtation, proceed more offenſive laſſitudes, than from ambulation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.] 1. That which has the power or faculty of walking. 2. That which happens during a paſſage or walk. 3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exerciſe of its juriſdiction.

(1.) The gradient, or ambulatory, are ſuch as require ſome baſis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: ſuch were thoſe ſelf-moving ſtatues, which, unleſs violently detained, would of themſelves run away. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

(2.) He was ſent to conduce hither the princeſs of whom his majeſty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Wotton.

A'MBURY. n. ſ. A bloody wart on any part of a horſe's body.

AMBUSCA'DE. n. ſ. [embuſcade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private ſtation in which men lie to ſurpize others; ambuſh.

Then waving high her torch, the ſignal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuſcade. Dryden.

When I behold a faſhionable table ſet out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable diſtempers, lie in ambuſcade among the diſhes. Addiſon.

AMBUSCA'DO. n. ſ. [emboſcado, Span.] A private poſt, in order to ſurpriſe an enemy.

Sometimes ſhe driveth o'er a ſoldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuſcadoes, Spaniſh blades,
Of healths five fathom deep. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'MBUSH. n. ſ. [embuſche, Fr. from bois, a wood; whence embuſcher, to hide in woods, ambuſhes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick foreſts.] 1 The poſt where ſoldiers or aſſaſſins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy. 2. The act of ſurpriſing another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a ſecret poſt. 3. The ſtate of being poſted privately, in order to ſurpriſe; the ſtate of lying in wait. 4. Perhaps the perſons placed in private ſtations.

(1.) The reſidue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambuſh, whence iſſued more. Then the earl maintained the fight. But the enemy, intending to draw the Engliſh further into their ambuſh, turned away at an eaſy pace. Hayward.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxallans yield,
Bold in cloſe ambuſh, baſe in open field. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

(2.) ———Nor ſhall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whoſe high walls fear no aſſault or ſiege,
Or ambuſh from the deep. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

(4.) For you, my noble lord of Lancaſter,
Once did I lay an ambuſh for your life. Shakeſp. Rich. II.

A'MBUSHED. adj. [from ambuſh.] Placed in ambuſh; lying in wait.

Thick as the ſhades, there iſſue ſwarming bands
Of ambuſh'd men, whom, by their arms and dreſs,
To be Taxallan enemies I gueſs. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

A'MBUSHMENT. n. ſ. [from ambuſh; which ſee.] Ambuſh; ſurpriſe: a word now not uſed.

Like as a wily fox, that having ſpied
Where on a ſunny bank the lambs do play,
Full cloſely creeping by the hinder ſide,
Lies in ambuſhment of his hoped prey. Spenſer.

AMBU'ST. adj. [ambuſtus, Lat.] Burnt; ſcalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION. n. ſ. [ambuſtio, Lat.] A burn; a ſcald.

A'MEL. n. ſ [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glaſs melted with calcined tin, compoſe an undiaphanous body. This white amel is the baſis of all thoſe fine concretes that goldſmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N. adv. [A word of which the original has given riſe to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, ſignifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word ſeems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, ſignifies firmneſs, certainty, fidelity.] A term uſed in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean, ſo be it, at the end of a creed, ſo it is.

One cried, God bleſs us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had ſeen me with theſe hangman's hands.
Liſtening their fear, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſs us. Shakeſp. Macb.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, from everlaſting to everlaſting, Amen and amen. Pſam xli. 13.

AME'NABLE. adj. [ameſnable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, ſignifies, to oblige one to appear to anſwer a charge exhibited againſt him.] Reſponſible; ſubject ſo as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, becauſe the inferiour ſort were looſe and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the beſt and eldeſt perſons of every ſept, ſhould bring in all the idle perſons of their ſurname, to be juſtified by the law. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'MENAGE. } n. ſ. [They ſeem to come from amener, Fr.]
A'MENANCE. } Conduct; behaviour; mien: words diſuſed.

For he is fit to uſe in all eſſays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or elſe for wiſe and civil governance. Spenſer.

———Well kend him ſo far ſpace,
Th' enchanter, by his arms and amenance,
When under him he ſaw his Lybian ſteed to prance. Fairy Queen.

To AME'ND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.] 1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to ſomething better. 2. To reform the life, or leave wickedneſs. In theſe two caſes we uſually write mend. See MEND. 3. To reſtore paſſages in writers which the copiers are ſuppoſed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

(2.) Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cauſe you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve ſuppoſes or not denies that the thing is well already, but to amend implies ſomething wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

————At his touch
Such ſanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They preſently amend. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

AME'NDE. n. ſ. [French.] This word, in French, ſignifies a fine by which recompenſe is ſuppoſed to be made for the fault committed. We uſe, in a cognate ſignification, the word amends.

AME'NDMENT. n. ſ. [amendement, Fr.] 1. A change from bad for the better. 2. Reformation of life. 3. Recovery of health.

(1.) Before it was preſented on the ſtage, ſome things in it have paſſed your approbation and amendment. Dryden.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature obſerves the ſame tenour, becauſe her works are ſo perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be reprehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the underſtanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

(2.) Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the teſtimony which Moſes and the prophets have given, concerning the miſeries that follow ſinners after death, were not likely to be perſuaded by other means, although God from the dead ſhould have raiſed them up preachers. Hooker.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguiſh, are ſent as ſcourges for amendment. 2 Eſdras, xvi. 19.

Though a ſerious purpoſe of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no ſure judgment whether this purpoſe be ſerious, or theſe acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Catechiſm.

(3.) Your honour's players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleaſant comedy. Shakeſpeare.

AME'NDMENT. [emendatio, Lat.] It ſignifies, in law, the correction of an errour committed in a proceſs, and eſpied before or after judgment; and ſometimes after the party's ſeeking advantage by the errour. Blount.

AME'NDER. n. ſ. [from amend.] The perſon that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. ſ. [amende, Fr. from which it ſeems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompenſe; compenſation; atonement.

If I have too auſterely puniſh'd you,
Your compenſation makes amends. Shakeſpeare.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to thoſe that had ſuffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Raleigh's Eſſays.

Where I a pris'ner chain'd, ſcarce freely draw
The air impriſon'd alſo, cloſe and damp,
Unwholeſome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n freſh blowing, pure and ſweet,
With day-ſpring born; here leave me to reſpire. Milton.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I may make the world ſome part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden.

If our ſouls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compenſation for the frailties of life, and ſufferings of this ſtate. Tillotſon.

It is a ſtrong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous perſons are very often unfortunate, and vicious perſons proſperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wiſe and good in all his works; unleſs we may ſuppoſe that ſuch a promiſcuous diſtribution, which was neceſſary for carrying on the deſigns of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spectator.

AME'NITY. n. ſ. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleaſantneſs; agreeableneſs of ſituation.

If the ſituation of Babylon was ſuch at firſt, as in the days of Herodotus, it was a ſeat of amenity and pleaſure. Brown.

AMENTA'CEOUS. adj. [amentatus, Lat.] Hanging as by a thread.

The pine tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins. Miller.

To AME'RCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr. Ὀφθαλμῶν μὲν ἄμερσε, ſeems to give the original.] 1. To puniſh with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers, and is uſed by Spenſer of puniſhments in general. 2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine. 3. Sometimes it is uſed, in imitation of the Greek conſtruction, with the particle of.

(1.) Where every one that miſſeth then her make,
Shall be by him amerc't with penance due. Spenſer.

But I'll amerce you with ſo ſtrong a fine,
That you ſhall all repent the loſs of mine. Shakeſp.

All the ſuitors were conſiderably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for thoſe miſchiefs. Hale.

(2.) They ſhall amerce him in an hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and give them unto the father of the damſel, becauſe he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Iſrael. Deut. xxii. 19.

(3.) Millions of ſpirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal ſplendours flung
For his revolt. Milton.

AME'RCER. n. ſ. [from amerce.] He that ſets a fine upon any miſdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary puniſhment or forfeiture.

AME'RCEMENT. } n. ſ. [from amerce.] The pecuniary pu-
AME'RCIAMENT. } niſhment of an offender, who ſtands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that ſhall be impoſed upon them, ſhall come unto themſelves. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

AMES ACE. n. ſ. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early ſoftened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice
And dext'rouſly to throw the lucky ſice:
To ſhun ames ace, that ſwept my ſtakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they ſhould convey
Falſe bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

A'MESS. n. ſ. [corrupted from amice.] A prieſt's veſtment. Dict.

AMETHO'DICAL. adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST. n. ſ. [αμέθυστος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenneſs; ſo called, either becauſe it is not quite of the colour of wine, or becauſe it was imagined to prevent inebriation.] A precious ſtone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyſt is the hardeſt, ſcarceſt, and moſt valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though ſome are purple, and others white like the diamond. The German is of a violet colour, and the Spaniſh are of three ſorts; the beſt are the blackeſt or deepeſt violet; others are almoſt quite white, and ſome few tinctured with yellow. The amethyſt is not extremely hard, but eaſy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers.

Some ſtones approached the granate complexion; and ſeveral nearly reſembled the amethyſt. Woodward.

A'METHYST [In heraldry] ſignifies the ſame colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's.

AMETHY'STINE. adj. [from amethyſt.] Reſembling an amethyſt in colour.

A kind of amethyſtine flint not compoſed of cryſtals or grains, but one entire maſſy ſtone. Grew.

A'MIABLE. adj. [aimable, Fr.] 1. Lovely; pleaſing. 2. Pretending love; ſhowing love.

(1.) That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable alſo. Hooker.

——She told her, while ſhe kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, ſubdue my father
Intirely to her love; but if ſhe loſt it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed. Shakeſp. Othello.

(2.) Lay amiable ſiege to the honeſty of this Ford's wife; uſe your art of wooing. Shakeſpeare.

A'MIABLENESS. n. ſ. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; lovelineſs; power of raiſing love.

As ſoon as the natural gaiety and amiableneſs of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuſe of the ſpecies. Addiſon.

A'MIABLY. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in ſuch a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly uſed of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we ſeldom ſay, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be ſo uſed in this paſſage.

O grace ſerene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Freſh blooming hope, gay daughter of the ſky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter each mild, each amicable gueſt;
Receive and wrap me in eternal reſt. Pope.

A'MICABLENESS. n. ſ. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendlineſs; goodwill.

A'MICABLY. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

————They ſee
Through the dun miſt, in blooming beauty freſh,
Two lovely youths, that amicably walkt
O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd
Anna's late conqueſts. Philips.

I found my ſubjects amicably join,
To leſſen their defect, by citing mine. Prior.

In Holland itſelf, where it is pretended that the variety of ſects live ſo amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to deſtroy the republick. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Englandman.

A'MICE. n. ſ. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex ſex indumentis epiſcopo & preſbyteriis communibus ſunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, ſtola, manipulus, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum ſtringitur, & pectus tegitur, caſtitatem interioris hominis deſignat; tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet, ſtringit autem collum, ne inde ad linguam tranſeat mendacium. Bruno.] The firſt or undermoſt part of a prieſt's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus paſs'd the night ſo foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim ſteps in amice grey. Milton.

On ſome a prieſt, ſuccinct in amice white Attends. Pope.

AMI'D. } prep. [from a and mid, or midſt.] 1. In the AMI'DST. } midſt; equally diſtant from either extremity. 2. Mingled with; ſurrounded by; in the ambit of another thing. 3. Amongſt; conjoined with.

(1.) ——————Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree amidſt
The garden, God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's ſtatue of the great duke, amidſt the four ſlaves, chained to his pedeſtal, are very noble ſights. Addiſon.

(2.) Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro, with jaculation dire. Milton.

What have I done, to name that wealthy ſwain,
The boar amidſt my cryſtal ſtreams I bring;
And ſouthern winds to blaſt my flow'ry ſpring. Dryden.

Amata's breaſt the fury thus invades,
And fires with rage amid the ſylvan ſhades. Dryden.

(3.) What tho' no real voice nor ſound
Amid the radiant orbs be found?
In reaſon's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever ſinging, as they ſhine,
"The hand that made us is divine." Addiſon.

AMI'SS. adv. [from a, which, in this form of compoſition, often ſignifies according to, and miſs, the Engliſh particle, which ſhows any thing, like the Greek ϖαρά, to be wrong; as, to miſcount, to count erroneouſly; to miſdo, to commit a crime: amiſs therefore ſignifies not right, or out of order.] 1. Faulty; criminal. 2. Faultily; criminally. 3. In an ill ſenſe. 4. Wrong; improper; unfit. 5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be. 6. Reproachful; irreverent. 7. Impaired in health; as, I was ſomewhat amiſs yeſterday, but am well to-day. 8. Amiſs is marked as an adverb, tho' it cannot always be adverbially rendered; becauſe it always follows the ſubſtantive to which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in Engliſh; and though we ſay the action was amiſs, we never ſay an amiſs action. 9. Amiſs is uſed by Shakeſpeare as a noun ſubſtantive.

(1.) For that which thou haſt ſworn to do amiſs,
Is yet amiſs when it is truly done. Shakeſp. King John.

(2.) We hope therefore to reform ourſelves, if at any time we have done amiſs, is not to ſever ourſelves from the church we were of before. Hooker.

————O ye powers that ſearch
The heart of man, and weigh his inmoſt thoughts,
If I have done amiſs, impute it not. Addiſon.

(3.) She ſigh'd withal, they conſtru'd all amiſs,
And thought ſhe wiſh'd to kill who long'd to kiſs. Fairfax.

(4.) Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counſels only and perſuaſions, not amiſs to be followed by them, whoſe caſe is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all ſcience, and all principles, yet it might not be amiſs to have ſome conſcience. Tillotſon.

(5.) Your kindred is not much amiſs, 'tis true;
Yet I am ſomewhat better born than you. Dryden.

I built a wall, and when the maſons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me ſo much as to ſtand by, while my ſervants threw down what was amiſs. Swift.

(6.) Every people, nation, and language, which ſpeak any thing amiſs againſt the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, ſhall be cut in pieces, and their houſes ſhall be made a dunghill; becauſe there is no other God that can deliver after this ſort. Daniel, iii. 29.

(9.) To my ſick ſoul, as ſin's true nature is,
Each toy ſeems prologue to ſome great amiſs. Hamlet.

AMI'SSION. n. ſ. [amiſſio, Lat.] Loſs.

To AMI'T. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To loſe: a word little in uſe.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a conſiſtence or determination of its diffluency, and amitteth not its eſſence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MITY. n. ſ. [amitie, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendſhip, whether publick between nations, oppoſed to war, or among the people, oppoſed to diſcord, or between private perſons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the houſe of God, ſhould make the bond of their love inſoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears moſt ſtrongly
In bearing thus the abſence of your lord. Shakeſpeare.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Purſue this race, this ſervice dedicate
To my deplored aſhes; let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

AMMONI'AC. n. ſ. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the Eaſt Indies, and is ſuppoſed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioſcorides ſays, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agaſyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he ſays, grows near the temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowiſh without, eaſily fuſible, reſinous, ſomewhat bitter, and of a very ſharp taſte, and ſmell, ſomewhat like garlick. This gum is ſaid to have ſerved the ancients for incenſe, in their ſacrifices. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile ſalt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient ſort, deſcribed by Pliny and Dioſcorides, was a native ſalt, generated in thoſe large inns where the crouds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, uſed to lodge; who, travelling upon camels, and thoſe creatures in Cyrene, where that celebrated temple ſtood, urining in the ſtables, or, in the parched ſands, out of this urine, which is remarkably ſtrong, aroſe a kind of ſalt, denominated ſometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and ſometimes from the country, Cyreniac. No more of this ſalt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, ſome ſuſpect there never was any ſuch thing: but this ſuſpicion is removed, by the large quantities of a ſalt, nearly of the ſame nature, thrown out by mount Ætna.

The modern ſal ammoniac is made in Egypt; where long necked glaſs bottles, filled with ſoot, a little ſea ſalt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, in a thick bed of aſhes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual ſtrong fire. The ſteam ſwells up the cotton, and forms a paſte at the vent-hole, hindering the ſalts from evaporating; which ſtick to the top of the bottle, and are taken out in thoſe large cakes, which they ſend to England. Only ſoot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the ſtrongeſt.

Our chymiſts imitate the Egyptian ſal ammoniac, by adding one part of common ſalt to five of urine: with which ſome mix that quantity of ſoot, and putting the whole in a veſſel they raiſe from it, by ſublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous ſubſtance, which they call ſal ammoniac. Chambers.

AMMONI'ACAL. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac ſalt.

Human blood calcin'd, yields no fixed ſalt; nor is it a ſal ammoniack; for that remains immutable after repeated diſtillations; and diſtillation deſtroys the ammoniacal quality of animal ſalts, and turns them alkaline: ſo that it is a ſalt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but ſoft and benign, approaching neareſt to the nature of ſal ammoniac. Arbuthnot.

AMMUNI'TION. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by ſome to come from amonitio, which, in the barbarous ages, ſeems to have ſignified ſupply of proviſion; but it, ſurely, may be more reaſonably derived from munitio, fortification; choſes à munitions, things for the fortreſſes.] Military ſtores.

They muſt make themſelves defenſible againſt ſtrangers; and muſt have the aſſiſtance of ſome able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel ſtaid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon.

All the rich mines of learning ranſackt are,
To furniſh ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now his ſtores of ammunition ſpent,
His naked valour is his only guard:
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon ſent,
And ſolitary guns are ſcarcely heard. Dryden.

AMMUNI'TION BREAD. n. ſ. Bread for the ſupply of the armies or garriſons.

A'MNESTY. n. ſ. [ἀμνηϛία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes againſt the government, to a certain time, are ſo obliterated that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may ſafely commit upon the laſt of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the firſt of July; by which the greateſt criminals may eſcape, provided they continue long enough in power, to antiquate their crimes, and, by ſtifling them a while, deceive the legiſlature into an amneſty. Swift.

AMNI'COLIST. n. ſ. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. Dict.

AMNI'GENOUS. n. ſ. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

A'MNION. } n. ſ. [Lat. perhaps from ἄμνος.] The innermoſt membrane with which the fœtus in the womb is moſt immediately covered, and with which the reſt of the ſecundines, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It alſo contains a nutritious humour, ſeparated by glands for that purpoſe, with which the fœtus is preſerved. It is outwardly cloathed with the urinary membrane, and the chorion, which ſometimes ſtick ſo cloſe to one another, that they can ſcarce be ſeparated. It has alſo its veſſels from the ſame origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMO'MUM. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſort of fruit. The commentators on Pliny and Dioſcorides differ about the ancient amomum; but the generality of them ſuppoſe it to be a fruit different from ours. The modern amomum appears to be the ſiſon of the ancients, or baſtard ſtone-parſley. It reſembles the muſcat grape, grows in cluſters, and is about the thickneſs of a pea. This fruit is brought from the Eaſt-Indies, and makes part of the compoſition of treacle. It is of a hot ſpicy taſte and ſmell. Trevoux. Chambers.

AMO'NG. } prep. [amanᵹ, ᵹemanᵹ, Saxon.] 1. Mingled with; placed with other perſons or things on every ſide. 2. Conjoined with others, ſo as to make part of the number.

(1.) Amongſt ſtrawberries ſow here and there ſome borage-ſeed; and you ſhall find the ſtrawberries under thoſe leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

——— The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by ſoft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his preſence hid themſelves, among
The thickeſt trees, both man and wife. Milton.

(2.) I have then, as you ſee, obſerved the failings of many great wits amongſt the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus, in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the ſame deſign. Addiſon.

A'MORIST. n. ſ. [from amour.] An inamorato; a gallant; a man profeſſing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though caſualties ſhould ſpare them, age brings in a neceſſity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white, perplexed by incertainty both of the continuance of their miſtreſs's kindneſs, and her beauty, both which are neceſſary to the amoriſt's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMORO'SO. n. ſ. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Dict.

A'MOROUS. adj. [amoroſo, Ital.] 1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakeſpeare, on. 2. Naturally inclined to love; diſpoſed to fondneſs; fond. 3. Relating, or belonging to love.

(1.) Sure my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakeſpeare.

The am'rous maſter own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembl'd as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his firſt ſurprize,
And as the piece advanc'd the paſſion grew. Prior.

(2.) Apes, as ſoon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eyes faſtened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty; ſo amorous is nature of whatſoever ſhe produces. Dryden's Du Freſnoy.

(3.) I that am not ſhap'd for ſportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glaſs,
I, that am rudely ſtampt. Shakeſp. Richard III.

The ſpirit of love, and amorous delight. Milton.

——— In the amorous net
Firſt caught they lik'd; and each his liking choſe. Milton.

O! how I long my careleſs limbs to lay
Under the plantane's ſhade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain,
Invoke the muſes, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'MOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt ſwim in that live-bath,
Each fiſh, which every channel hath,
Will amorouſly to thee ſwim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'MOROUSNESS. n. ſ. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondneſs; lovingneſs; love.

All Gynecia's actions were interpreted by Baſilius, as proceeding from jealouſy of his amorouſneſs. Sidney.

Lindamor has wit, and amorouſneſs enough, to make him find it more eaſy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himſelf againſt them. Boyle on Colours.

AMO'RT. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the ſtate of the dead; dejected; depreſſed; ſpiritleſs.

How fares my Kate? what, ſweeting, all amort?
Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZA'TION. }
AMO'RTIZEMENT. } n. ſ. [amortiſſement, amortiſſable, Fr.] The right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to ſome community, that never is to ceaſe.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an eſpecial proviſion for them, after the laws of amortization were deviſed and put in uſe by princes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMO'RTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild or fraternity, and their ſucceſſors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.

This did concern the kingdom to have farms ſufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands into the yeomanry, or middle part of the people. Bacon.

To AMO'VE. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.] 1. To remove from a poſt or ſtation: a juridical ſenſe. 2. To remove; to move; to alter: a ſenſe now out of uſe

No man is of ſo general and diffuſive a luſt, as to proſecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never ſo outrageouſly, yet the impure flame will either die of itſelf, or conſume the body that harbours it. South.

The reſtleſs youth ſearch'd all the world around;
But how can Jove in his amours be found? Addiſon.

A'MPER. n. ſ. [ampne, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; bile: a word ſaid, by Skinner, to be much in uſe in Eſſex; but perhaps not found in books

AMPHI'BIOUS. adj. [ἀμφὶ and βίος.] 1. That which partakes of two natures, ſo as to live in two elements; as, in air and water. 2 Of a mixt nature, in alluſion to animals that live in air and water.

(1.) A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beaſt, a fiſh in water. Hudibras.

Thoſe are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are obſerved to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of thoſe creatures that live at eaſe, and by choice, a good while, or at any time upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fiſhes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate ſomewhat of the nature of fiſhes, and are oily. Arbuthnot.

(2.) Traulus of amphibious breed,
Motly fruit of mungrel ſeed;
By the dam from lordlings ſprung,
By this ſire exhal'd from dung. Swift.

AMPHI'BIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLO'GICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLO'GICALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBO'LOGY. n. ſ. [ἀμφιβολογία.] Diſcourſe of uncertain meaning. It is diſtinguiſhed from equivocation, which means the double ſignification of a ſingle word; as, noli regem occidere timere bonum eſt, is amphibology; captare lepores, meaning by lepores, either hares or jeſts, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themſelves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real: of the verbal, and ſuch as conclude from miſtakes of the word, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation and amphibology. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He that affirm'd 'gainſt ſenſe, ſnow black to be,
Might prove it by this amphibology;
Things are not what they ſeem. Verſes on Cleveland.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to uſe what is moſt plain and eaſy; that the mind be not miſled by amphibologies, into fallacious deductions. Glanville.

AMPHI'BOLOUS. adj. [ἀμφι and βάλλω.] Toſſed from one to another; ſtriking each way.

Never was there ſuch an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themſelves for the king, and making uſe of his name in all their remonſtrances, to juſtify their actions. Howell.

AMPHI'LOGY. n. ſ. [ἄμφι and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. Dict.

AMPHISBÆ'NA. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀμφισβαίνα.] A ſerpent ſuppoſed to have two heads, and by conſequence to move with either end foremoſt.

Scorpion, and aſp, and amphiſbæna dire. Milton.

AMPHI'SCII. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀμφίσκιοι, of αμφι and σκία, a ſhadow.] Thoſe people dwelling in climates, wherein the ſhadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the ſun is in the ſouthern ſigns, and to the ſouth pole, when he is in the northern ſigns. Theſe are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHE'ATRE. n. ſ. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφι and θεάομαι.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompaſſed with rows of ſeats one above another; where ſpectators might behold ſpectacles, as ſtage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a ſemicircle, only exceeding a juſt ſemicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; ſo that the longeſt diameter of the amphitheatre, was to the ſhorteſt, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees; to ſixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to ſee. Dryden.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the inſults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and ſtill keeping his ſeat; or ſtretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his ſoul, among the exquiſite ſufferings of ſuch a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaſpheme his Saviour. Addiſon.

A'MPLE. adj. [amplus, Lat.] 1. Large; wide; extended. 2. Great in bulk. 3. Unlimited; without reſtriction. 4. Liberal; large; without parſimony. 5. Magnificent; ſplendid. 6. Diffuſive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative; that is, not an epitome.

(1.) ——————Heav'n deſcends
In univerſal bounty, ſhedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on Nature's ample lap. Thomſon.

(2.) Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonſtration of grief?——————
She took 'em, and read 'em in my preſence,
And now and then an ample tear thrill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakeſp. King Lear.

(3.) Have what you aſk, your preſents I receive;
Land where, and when you pleaſe, with ample leave. Dryd.

(4.) If we ſpeak of ſtrict juſtice, God could no way have been bound to require man's labours in ſo large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth ſo far the other's value. Hooker.

(5.) To diſpoſe the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promiſes, that, within ſo many days after the ſiege ſhould be raiſed, he would advance his highneſs's levies with two thouſand men. Clarendon.

A'MPLENESS. n. ſ. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeneſs; ſplendour.

Impoſſible it is for a perſon of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleneſs of the body you repreſent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He ſhall look upon it, not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate. Brown.

AMPLIA'TION. n. ſ. [from ampliate.] 1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extenſion. 2. Diffuſeneſs; enlargement.

(1.) Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be reſtrained and interpreted in the mildeſt ſenſe. Ayliffe's Parergon.

(2.) The obſcurity of the ſubject, and the prejudice and prepoſſeſſion of moſt readers, may plead excuſe for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilſt I labour to expreſs myſelf plain and full. Holder.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to ſpread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.] 1. Enlargement; extenſion. 2. It is uſually taken in a rhetorical ſenſe, and implies exaggerated repreſentation, or diffuſe narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumſtances.

(2.) I ſhall ſummarily, without any amplification at all, ſhew in what manner defects have been ſupplied. Davies.

Things unknown ſeem greater than they are, and are uſually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is the poet juſtifiable for relating ſuch incredible amplifications? It may be anſwered, if he had put theſe extravagances into the mouth of Ulyſſes, he had been unpardonable; but they ſuit well with the character of Alcinous. Pope.

A'MPLIFIER. n. ſ. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that repreſents any thing with a large diſplay of the beſt circumſtances; it being uſually taken in a good ſenſe.

Dorillaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the higheſt point of praiſe. Sidney.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.] 1. To enlarge; to encreaſe any material ſubſtance, or object of ſenſe. 2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal. 3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of repreſentation. 4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

(1.) So when a great moneyed man hath divided his cheſts, and coins, and bags, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts, and to examine it according to the ſeveral circumſtances. Bacon.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the ſound at the coming out. Bacon.

(2.) As the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in theſe blind ages, ſo grew up in them withal, a deſire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as mens opinions have formed them in ſpiritual matters. Raleigh.

(3.) Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakeſpeare.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is paſt, I would not willingly ſeem to flatter the preſent, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of thoſe ſervitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies.

(4.) In paraphraſe the author's words are not ſtrictly followed, his ſenſe too is amplified but not altered, as Waller's tranſlation of Virgil. Dryden.

I feel age advancing, and my health is inſufficient to increaſe and amplify theſe remarks, to confirm and improve theſe rules, and to illuminate the ſeveral pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on. 1. To ſpeak largely in many words; to lay one's ſelf out in diffuſion. 2. To form large or pompous repreſentations.

(1.) When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a diſcourſe, you will often lay a neceſſity upon yourſelf of contracting the latter, and prevent yourſelf in the moſt important part of your deſign. Watts's Logick.

(2.) An excellent medicine for the ſtone might be conceived, by amplifying apprehenſions able to break a diamond. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I have ſometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here where the ſubject is ſo fruitful, that the harveſt overcomes the reaper, I am ſhortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, ſo they might be men of great ſtature, or giants. Pope's Odyſſey.

There were, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus, in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the ſame deſign. Addiſon.

A'MORIST. n. ſ. [from amour.] An inamorato; a gallant; a man profeſſing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though caſualties ſhould ſpare them, age brings in a neceſſity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white, perplexed by incertainty both of the continuance of their miſtreſs's kindneſs, and her beauty, both which are neceſſary to the amoriſt's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMORO'SO. n. ſ [Ital.] A man enamoured. Dict.

A'MOROUS. adj. [amoroſo, Ital.] 1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakeſpeare, on. 2. Naturally inclined to love; diſpoſed to fondneſs; fond. 3. Relating, or belonging to love.

(2.) The obſcurity of the ſubject, and the prejudice and prepoſſeſſion of moſt readers, may plead excuſe for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilſt I labour to expreſs myſelf plain and full. Holder.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to ſpread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.] 1. Enlargement; extenſion. 2. It is uſually taken in a rhetorical ſenſe, and implies exaggerated repreſentation, or diffuſe narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumſtances.

(2.) I ſhall ſummarily, without any amplification at all, ſhew in what manner defects have been ſupplied. Davies.

Things unknown ſeem greater than they are, and are uſually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is the poet juſtifiable for relating ſuch incredible amplifications? It may be anſwered, if he had put theſe extravagances into the mouth of Ulyſſes, he had been unpardonable; but they ſuit well with the character of Alcinous. Pope.

A'MPLIFIER. n. ſ. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that repreſents any thing with a large diſplay of the beſt circumſtances; it being uſually taken in a good ſenſe.

Dorillaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the higheſt point of praiſe. Sidney.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.] 1. To enlarge; to encreaſe any material ſubſtance, or object of ſenſe. 2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal. 3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of repreſentation. 4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

(1.) So when a great moneyed man hath divided his cheſts, and coins, and bags, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts, and to examine it according to the ſeveral circumſtances. Bacon.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the ſound at the coming out. Bacon.

(2.) As the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in theſe blind ages, ſo grew up in them withal, a deſire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as mens opinions have formed them in ſpiritual matters. Raleigh.

(3.) Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakeſpeare.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is paſt, I would not willingly ſeem to flatter the preſent, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of thoſe ſervitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies.

(4.) In paraphraſe the author's words are not ſtrictly followed, his ſenſe too is amplified but not altered, as Waller's tranſlation of Virgil. Dryden.

I feel age advancing, and my health is inſufficient to increaſe and amplify theſe remarks, to confirm and improve theſe rules, and to illuminate the ſeveral pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on. 1. To ſpeak largely in many words; to lay one's ſelf out in diffuſion. 2. To form large or pompous repreſentations.

(1.) When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a diſcourſe, you will often lay a neceſſity upon yourſelf of contracting the latter, and prevent yourſelf in the moſt important part of your deſign. Watts's Logick.

(2.) An excellent medicine for the ſtone might be conceived, by amplifying apprehenſions able to break a diamond. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I have ſometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here where the ſubject is ſo fruitful, that the harveſt overcomes the reaper, I am ſhortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, ſo they might be men of great ſtature, or giants. Pope's Odyſſey.

A'MPLITUDE. n. ſ. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.] 1. Extent. 2. Largeneſs; greatneſs. 3. Capacity; extent of intellectual faculties. 4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity. 5. Copiouſneſs; abundance. 6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line ſubtending the path in which it moved. 7. Amplitude, in aſtronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true eaſt and weſt point thereof, and the centre of the ſun or ſtar at its riſing or ſetting. It is eaſtern or ortive, when the ſtar riſes, and weſtern or occiduous, when the ſtar ſets. The eaſtern or weſtern amplitude, are alſo called northern or ſouthern, as they fall in the northern or ſouthern quarters of the horizon. 8. Magnetical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon contained between the ſun at his riſing, and the eaſt or weſt point of the compaſs; or, it is the difference of the riſing or ſetting of the ſun, from the eaſt or weſt parts of the compaſs. Chambers.

(1.) Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville.

(2.) Men ſhould learn how ſevere a thing the true inquiſition of nature is, and accuſtom themſelves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowneſs of their minds. Bacon.

(3.) With more than human gifts from heaven adorn'd,
Perfections abſolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greateſt deeds. Milton.

(4.) In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or eſtates, to add amplitude and greatneſs to their kingdoms. Bacon's Eſſays.

(5.) You ſhould ſay every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulneſs of your diſcourſe, to your great deſign; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

A'MPLY. adv. [amplè, Lat.] 1. Largely; liberally. 2. At large; without reſerve. 3. At large; copiouſly; with a diffuſive detail.

(1.)——————For whoſe well-being,
So amply, and with hands ſo liberal,
Thou haſt provided all things. Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them: but they were reſolved not to be convinced: and to thoſe, who are reſolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments are equal. Atterbury.

(2.)——————At return
Of him ſo lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's ſeed; obſcurely then foretold,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Milton.

(3.) Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others muſt be caſt into ſhadows; that is, paſſed over in ſilence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Du Freſnoy.

To A'MPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word uſed only in chirurgery.

Amongſt the cruizers, it was complained, that their ſurgeons were too active in amputating fractured members. Wiſeman's Surgery.

AMPUTA'TION. n. ſ. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body. The uſual method of performing it, in the inſtance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the ſkin and fleſh are firſt to be drawn very tight upwards, and ſecured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another looſe one is paſſed, for the gripe; which being twiſted by means of a ſtick, may be ſtraitened to any degree at pleaſure. Then the patient being conveniently ſituated, and the operator placed to the inſide of the limb, which is to be held by one aſſiſtant above, and another below the part deſigned for the operation, and the gripe ſufficiently twiſted, to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the fleſh is, with a ſtroke or two, to be ſeparated from the bone with the diſmembering knife. Then the perioſtium being alſo divided from the bone with the back of the knife, ſaw the bone aſunder, with as few ſtrokes as poſſible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the fleſh that grows between them muſt likewiſe be ſeparated before the uſe of the ſaw. This being done, the gripe may be ſlackened, to give an opportunity of ſearching for the large blood veſſels, and ſecuring the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the ſtump, looſen the firſt ligature, and pull both the ſkin and the fleſh, as far as conveniently may be, over the ſtump, to cover it; and ſecure them with the croſs ſtitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the ſkin. Then apply pledgets, aſtringents, plaiſters, and other neceſſaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breaſt, had the freer uſe of their bow. Brown's Vulg. Err.

A'MULET. n. ſ. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, or amoletum, quod malum amolitur, Lat.] An appended remedy, or preſervative: a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of ſome particular diſeaſes.

That ſpirits are corporeal, ſeems at firſt view a conceit derogative unto himſelf; yet herein he eſtabliſheth the doctrine of luſtrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulg. Err.

They do not certainly know the falſity of what they report; and their ignorance muſt ſerve you as an amulet againſt the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY. n. ſ. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing. Dict.

To AMU'SE. v. a. [amuſer, Fr.] 1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without diſtracting it. To divert implies ſomething more lively, and to pleaſe, ſomething more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a ſenſe bordering on contempt. 2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation: as, he amuſed his followers with idle promiſes.

(1.) They think they ſee viſions, and are arrived to ſome extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuſe themſelves with the fantaſtick ideas of a buſy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuſe himſelf with trifles. Walſh.

AMU'SEMENT. n. ſ. [amuſement, Fr.] That which amuſes; entertainment.

Every intereſt or pleaſure of life, even the moſt trifling amuſement, is ſuffered to poſtpone the one thing neceſſary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amuſement was to give poiſon to dogs and cats, and ſee them expire by ſlower or quicker torments. Pope.

I was left to ſtand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleaſant amuſement to look on with ſafety, whilſt another was giving them diverſion at the hazard of his liberty. Swift.

AMU'SER. n. ſ. [amuſeur, Fr.] He that amuſes, as with falſe promiſes. The French word is always taken in an ill ſenſe.

AMU'SIVE. adj. [from amuſe.] That which has the power of amuſing. I know not that this is a current word.

——————But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amuſive arch before him fly,
Then vaniſh quite away. Thomſon.

AMY'GDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; reſembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon, een, Dutch, eine, German.] The article indefinite, uſed before a vowel, or h Mute See A. 1. One, but with leſs emphaſis; as, there ſtands a houſe. 2. Any, or ſome; as, an elephant might ſwim in this water. 3. Sometimes it ſignifies, like a, ſome particular ſtate; but this is now diſuſed. 4. An is ſometimes, in old authours, a contraction of and if. 5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if. 6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

(1.) Since he cannot be always employed in ſtudy, reading, and converſation, there will be many an hour, beſides what his exerciſes will take up. Locke.

(2.) He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the leaſt at a loſs concerning any branch of it. Locke.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honeſt man's the nobleſt work of God. Pope.

(3.) It is certain that odours do, in a ſmall degree, nouriſh; eſpecially the odour of wine; and we ſee men an hungred do love to ſmell hot bread. Bacon.

(4.) ——— He can't flatter, he!
An honeſt mind and plain, he muſt ſpeak truth;
An they will take it ſo; if not, he's plain. Shakeſp.

(5.) ——— ——— Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it,
——— He will an' if he live to be a man. Shakeſp.

(6.) My next pretty correſpondent, like Shakeſpeare's lion in Pyramus and Thiſbe, roars an' it were any nightingale. Addiſon.

ANA. adv. [ἄνα.] A word uſed in the preſcriptions of phyſick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the ſame weight prudence and innocence take,
Ana of each does the juſt mixture make. Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary, with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden.

ANA. n. ſ. Books ſo called from the laſt ſyllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana Thuaniana; they are looſe thoughts, or caſual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

Anaca'mptick. adj. [ἀνακάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick ſound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

Anaca'mpticks. n. ſ. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no ſingular.

Anacatha'rtick. n. ſ. [See Cathartick.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀνακεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation, or ſummary of the principal heads of a diſcourſe. Dict.

Ana'chorete. } n. ſ. [ſometimes viciouſly written ancho-
Ana'chorite. } rite; ἀναχωρήτης.] A monk, who, with the leave of his ſuperiour, leaves the convent for a more auſtere and ſolitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth ſit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Donne.

Ana'chronism. n. ſ. [from ἀνά and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are miſplaced with regard to each other. It ſeems properly to ſignify an errour by which an event is placed too early; but is generally uſed for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachroniſm, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almoſt two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

Anacla'ticks. n. ſ. [ἀνά and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light, dioptricks. It has no ſingular.

ANADIPLO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetorick, in which the laſt word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the firſt of the following; as, he retained his virtues amidſt all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtue brought upon him.

Anagoge'tical. adj. [ἀναγώγη.] That which contributes or relates to ſpiritual elevation, or religious raptures; myſterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

Anago'gical. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Myſterious; elevated; religiouſly exalted. Dict.

Anago'gically. adv. [from anagogical.] Myſteriouſly; with religious elevation.

ANAGRAM. n. ſ. [ἀνά and γράμμα.] A conceit ariſing from the letters of a name tranſpoſed; as this, of W,i,l,l,i,a,m. N,o,y, attorney general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' uſual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words, what could we ſay? Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchaſe fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

Anagra'mmatism. n. ſ. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quinteſſence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatiſm, or metagrammatiſm, which is a diſſolution of a name truly written into his letters, as his elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial tranſpoſition, without addition, ſubſtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making ſome perfect ſenſe appliable to the perſon named. Camden.

Anagra'mmatist. n. ſ. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To Anagra'mmatize. v. a. [anagrammatiſer, Fr.] To make anagrams.

Anale'ptick. adj. [ἀναληπτικός.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of phyſick.

Analeptick medicines cheriſh the nerves, and renew the ſpirits and ſtrength. Quincy.

Ana'logal. adj. [from analogous.] Analogous; having relation.

When I ſee many analogal motions in animals, tho' I cannot call them voluntary, yet I ſee them ſpontaneous, I have reaſon to conclude that theſe in their principle are not ſimply mechanical. Hale.

Analo'gical. adj. [from analogy.] 1. Uſed by way of analogy. It ſeems properly diſtinguiſhed from analogous, as words from things; analogous ſignifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of repreſenting relation. 2. Analogous; having reſemblance or relation.

(1.) It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeneſs, but by analogical repreſentation. Stillingfleet.

When a word, which originally ſignifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to ſeveral other objects, not by way of reſemblance, but on the account of ſome evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; ſo a ſound or healthy pulſe, a ſound digeſtion, ſound ſleep, are ſo called, with reference to a ſound and healthy conſtitution; but if you ſpeak of ſound doctrine, or ſound ſpeech, this is by way of reſemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

(2.) There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating ſomething analogical to either. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Analo'gically. adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the ſimplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is ſome one univerſal principle, running through the whole ſyſtem of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures. Cheyne.

Analo'gicalness. n. ſ. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitneſs to be applied for the illuſtration of ſome analogy.

Ana'logism. n. ſ. [ἀναλογισμὸς.] An argument from the cauſe to the effect.

To Ana'logize. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; to form ſome reſemblance between different things; to conſider ſomething with regard to its analogy with ſomewhat elſe

We have ſyſtems of material bodies, diverſly figured and ſituated, if ſeparately conſidered; they repreſent the object of the deſire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation. Cheyne.

Ana'logous. adj. [ἀνα and λόγος.] 1. Having analogy; bearing ſome reſemblance or proportion; having ſomething parallel. 2. It has the word to before the thing to which the reſemblance is noted.

(1.) Exerciſe makes things eaſy, that would be otherwiſe very hard; as, in labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is ſomething analogous in the exerciſe of the mind, to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward. L'Eſtrange.

Many important conſequences may be drawn from the obſervation of the moſt common things, and analogous reaſonings from the cauſes of them. Arbuthnot.

(2.) This incorporeal ſubſtance may have ſome ſort of exiſtence, analogous to corporeal extenſion: though we have no adequate conception hereof. Locke.

ANA'LOGY. n. ſ. [ἀναλογια.] 1. Reſemblance between things with regard to ſome circumſtances or effects; as, learning is ſaid to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to diſcover that which was hidden before. 2. When the thing to which the analogy is ſuppoſed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is uſed. 3. By grammarians, it is uſed to ſignify the agreement of ſeveral words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved, from hate, hated, from grieve, grieved.

(1.) From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a preſcript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the ſame, yet, for the moſt part, retaining the ſame analogy. Hooker.

What I here obſerve of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to thoſe communications of God's will, that are requiſite to ſalvation. South.

(2.) If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were neceſſary in a hot diſtemper'd ſtate. Dryd.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the ſame with that of the preſent earth. Burnet's Theory.

If we make Juvenal expreſs the cuſtoms of our country, rather than of Rome, it is when there was ſome analogy betwixt the cuſtoms. Dryden.

ANA'LYSIS. n. ſ. [ἀνάλυσις.] 1. A ſeparation of a compound body into the ſeveral parts of which it conſiſts. 2. A conſideration of any thing in parts, ſo as that one particular is firſt conſidered, then another. 3. A ſolution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its firſt elements; as, of a ſentence to the ſingle words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune, to ſingle notes; of an argument, to ſimple propoſitions.

(1.) There is an account of dew falling, in ſome places, in the form of butter, or greaſe, which grows extremely fetid; ſo that the analyſis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the beſt method of finding ſuch contents of the ſoil as are within the reach of the ſun. Arbuthnot.

(2.) Analyſis conſiſts in making experiments and obſervations, and in drawing general concluſions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections but ſuch as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths. Newton's Opt.

(3.) We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analyſis of its true initial cauſes; till we know the firſt ſprings of natural motions, we are ſtill but ignorants. Glanville.

ANALY'TICAL. adj [from analyſis.] 1. That which reſolves any thing into firſt principles; that which ſeparates any compound. See ANALYSIS. 2. That which proceeds by analyſis, or by taking the parts of a compound into diſtinct and particular conſideration.

(1.) Either may be probably maintained againſt the inaccurateneſs of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

(2.) Deſcartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philoſophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the univerſal fabrick: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheſes. Glanville.

ANALY'TICALLY. adv. [from analytical.] In ſuch a manner as ſeparates compounds into ſimples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALY'TICK. adj. [ἀναλυτικός.] The ſame manner of reſolving compounds into the ſimple conſtituent or component parts, applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,
Profoundly ſkill'd in analytick. Hudibras.

Analytick method takes the whole compounds as it finds it, whether it be a ſpecies or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by reſolving into its firſt principles, or parts, its generick nature, and its ſpecial properties; and therefore it is called the method of reſolution. Watts's Logick.

To A'NALYZE. v. a. [ἀναλύω.] To reſolve a compound into its firſt principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chymiſtry enabling us to depurate bodies, and, in ſome meaſure, to analyze them, and take aſunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more ſimple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to preſent them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its laſt principles; if it be inquired, why ſuch an action is to be avoided, the immediate anſwer is, becauſe it is ſin. Norris's Miſcel.

When the ſentence is diſtinguiſhed into ſubject and predicate, propoſition, argument, act, object, cauſe, effect, adjunct, oppoſite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphyſically. This laſt is what is chiefly meant in the theological ſchools, when they ſpeak of analyzing a text of ſcripture. Watts's Logick.

A'NALYZER. n. ſ. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reaſons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and univerſal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANAMORPHO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀνὰ and μορφόω.] Deformation; a perſpective projection of any thing, ſo that to the eye, at one point of view, it ſhall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular repreſentation. Sometimes it is made to appear confuſed to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirrour of a certain form.

ANA'NAS. n. ſ. The pine apple.

It has a flower conſiſting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and funnel-ſhaped; the embryos produced in the tubercles, afterwards become fruit; the ſeeds in the tubercles are ſmall, and almoſt kidney-ſhaped.

The ſpecies are, 1. Oval-ſhaped pine-apple, with a whitiſh fleſh. 2. Pyramidal pine-apple, with a yellow fleſh. 3. Pine apple, with ſmooth leaves. 4. Pine apple, with ſhining green leaves, and ſcarce any ſpines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine. Miller.

Witneſs thou beſt anana, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age. Thomſon.

ANA'NAS, wild. The ſame with penguin. See PENGUIN.

ANA'PHORA. n. ſ. [ἀναφορὰ.] A figure, when ſeveral clauſes of a ſentence are begun with the ſame word, or ſound; as — Where is the wiſe? Where is the ſcribe? Where is the diſputer of this world?

ANAPLERO'TICK. adj. [ἀναπληρόω.] That which fills up any vacuity; uſed of applications which promote fleſh.

A'NARCH. n. ſ. [See ANARCHY.] An authour of confuſion.

————Him thus the anarch old,
With fault'ring ſpeech, and viſage incompos'd,
Anſwer'd. Milton.

ANA'RCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confuſed; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious ſtate of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world preſume to determine the nature of ſubjects belonging to the ſupreme Spirit. Cheyne.

A'NARCHY. n. ſ. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a ſtate in which every man is unaccountable; a ſtate without magiſtracy.

————Where eldeſt night
And chaos, anceſtors of nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidſt the noiſe
Of endleſs wars, and by confuſion ſtand. Milton.

Arbitrary power is but the firſt natural ſtep from anarchy, or the ſavage life, the adjuſting power and freedom being an effect and conſequence of maturer thinking. Swift.

ANASA'RCA. n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and σαρξ.] A ſort of dropſy, where the whole ſubſtance is ſtuffed with pituitous humours. Quincy.

When the lympha ſtagnates, or is extravaſated under the ſkin, it is called an anaſarca. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Anasa'rcous. adj. [from anaſarca.] Relating to an anaſarca; partaking of the nature of an anaſarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an aſcites, with an anaſarcous ſwelling on her belly, thighs, and legs. Wiſeman.

ANASTOMO'SIS n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] The inoſculation of veſſels, or the opening of one veſſel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANA'STROPHE. n. ſ. [ἀναστροφὴ, a prepoſterous placing, from ἀναστρέφω.] A figure whereby words which ſhould have been precedent, are poſtponed.

ANA'THEMA. n. ſ. [ἀνάθεμα.] 1. A curſe pronounced by eccleſiaſtical authority; excommunication. 2. The object of the curſe, or perſon curſed. This ſeems the original meaning, though now little uſed.

(1.) Her bare anathemas fall but like ſo many bruta fulmina upon the ſchiſmatical; who think themſelves ſhrewdly hurt, forſooth, by being cut off from the body, which they chooſe not to be of. South's Sermons.

Anathema'tical. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

Anathema'tically. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To Anathe'matize. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accurſed by eccleſiaſtical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized, and, with deteſtation, branded and baniſhed out of the church. Hammond.

Anati'ferous. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks. Not in uſe.

If there be anatiferous trees, whoſe corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Ana'tocism. n. ſ. [anatociſmus, Lat. ἀνατοκισμὸς.] The accumulation of intereſt upon intereſt; the addition of the intereſt due for money lent, to the original ſum. A ſpecies of uſury generally forbidden.

Anato'mical. adj. [from anatomy.] 1. Relating or belonging to anatomy. 2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; conſidered as the object of anatomy. 3. Anatomized; diſſected; ſeparated.

(1.) When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of diviſion, it has the uſe of an anatomical knife, which diſſects an animal body, and ſeparates the veins, arteries, nerves, muſcles, membranes, &c. and ſhews us the ſeveral parts which go to the compoſition of a complete animal. Watts's Logick.

(2.) There is a natural, involuntary diſtortion of the muſcles, which is the anatomical cauſe of laughter; but there is another cauſe of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

(3.) The continuation of ſolidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from, hardneſs. Locke.

Anato'mically. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the ſenſe of an anatomiſt; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While ſome affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have conſtrued anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Ana'tomist. n. ſ. [ἀνατομὸς.] He that ſtudies the ſtructure of animal bodies, by means of diſſection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to diſcover the various parts.

Anatomiſts adjudged, that if nature had been ſuffered to run her own courſe, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Howel.

Hence when anatomiſts diſcourſe,
How like brutes organs are to ours;
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might ſoon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might ſqueak love odes, dogs bark ſatire. Prior.

To Ana'tomize. v. a. [ἀνατέμνω.] 1. To diſſect an animal; to divide the body into its component or conſtituent parts. 2. To lay any thing open diſtinctly, and by minute parts.

(1.) Our induſtry muſt even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hooker.

(2.) I ſpeak but brotherly of him, but ſhould I anatomize him to thee as he is, I muſt bluſh and weep, and then muſt look pale and wonder. Shakeſpeare.

Then dark diſtinctions reaſon's light diſguis'd,
And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Denham.

ANA'TOMY. n. ſ. [ἀνατομία.] 1. The art of diſſecting the body. 2. The doctrine of the ſtructure of the body, learned by diſſection. 3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual. 4. The body ſtripped of its integuments; a ſkeleton. 5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre perſon.

(1.) It is proverbially ſaid, Formicæ ſua bilis ineſt, habet et muſca ſplenem; whereas theſe parts anatomy hath not diſcovered in inſects. Brown's Vulg. Err.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by ſtudying too much ſuch finer nerves and veſſels, as will for ever eſcape our obſervation. Pope.

(2.) Let the muſcles be well inſerted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

(3.) When a moneyed man hath divided his cheſts, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was: therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts. Bacon.

(4.) O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a paſſion I would ſhake the world,
And rouze from ſleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakeſp.

(5.) They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy hollow-ey'd, ſharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man. Shakeſp. Comedy of Err.

A'natron. n. ſ. The ſcum which ſwims upon the molten glaſs in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common ſalt. It is likewiſe that ſalt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'nbury. n. ſ. See Ambury.

A'NCESTOR. n. ſ. [anceſtor, Lat. anceſtre, Fr.] One from whom a perſon deſcends, either by the father or the mother. It is diſtinguiſhed from predeceſſor; which is not, like anceſtor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch ſucceeds to his anceſtors: an elective, to his predeceſſors.

And ſhe lies buried with her anceſtors,
O, in a tomb where never ſcandal ſlept,
Save this of hers. Shakeſp. Much ado about Nothing.

Cham was the paternal anceſtor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whoſe ſon was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obſcure! why pr'ythee what am I? I know
My father, grandſire, and great grandſire too:
If farther I derive my pedigree,
I can but gueſs beyond the fourth degree.
The reſt of my forgotten anceſtors,
Were ſons of earth like him, or ſons of whores. Dryden.

A'ncestrel. adj. [from anceſtor.] Claimed from anceſtors; relating to anceſtors: a term of law.

Limitation in actions anceſtrel, was anciently ſo here in England. Hale.

A'NCESTRY. n. ſ. [from anceſtor.] 1. Lineage; a ſeries of anceſtors, or progenitors; the perſons who compoſe the lienage. 2 The honour of deſcent; birth.

(1.) Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
Mine anceſtry from famous Coradin,
Who firſt to raiſe our houſe to honour did begin: Spenſer.

A tenaceous adherence to the rights and liberties tranſmitted from a wiſe and virtuous anceſtry, publick ſpirit, and a love of one's country, are the ſupport and ornaments of government. Addiſon.

Say from what ſcepter'd anceſtry ye claim,
Recorded eminent in deathleſs fame? Pope.

(2.) Title and anceſtry render a good man more illuſtrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Addiſon.

A'NCHENTRY. n. ſ. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a meaſure and a cinque pace; the firſt ſuit is hot and haſty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantaſtical; the wedding mannerly modeſt, as a meaſure full of ſtate and anchentry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faſter and faſter, till he ſinks into his grave. Shakeſp.

A'NCHOR. n. ſ. [anchora, Lat.] 1. A heavy iron, compoſed of a long ſhank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is faſtened, and at the other, branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each ſide. Its uſe is to hold the ſhip, by being fixed to the ground. 2. It is uſed, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers ſtability or ſecurity. 3. The forms of ſpeech in which it is moſt commonly uſed, are, to caſt anchor, to lie or ride at anchor.

(1.) He ſaid, and wept; then ſpread his ſails before
The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman ſhore:
Their anchors dropt, his crew the veſſels moor. Dryd.

(2.) Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entereth into that within the veil. Heb.

(3.) The Turkiſh general, perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at ſea, withdrew his fleet, when caſting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

———Ent'ring with the tide,
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd:
Furl'd every ſail, and drawing down the maſt,
His veſſel moor'd, and made with haulſers faſt. Dryd.

Far from your capital my ſhip reſides
At Reithrus, and ſecure at anchor rides. Pope.

To A'NCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.] 1. To caſt anchor; to lie at anchor. 2. To ſtop at; to reſt on.

(1.) The fiſhermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark Diminiſh'd to her cock. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not. Bacon.

Or the ſtrait courſe to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimos' ſhaggy brow. Pope.

(2.)———My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Iſabel. Shakeſp.

To A'NCHOR. v. a. 1. To place at anchor; as, he anchored his ſhip. 2. To fix on.

(2.) My tongue ſhould to my ears not name my boys,
'Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes. Shakeſp.

A'NCHOR. n. ſ. Shakeſpeare ſeems to have uſed this word for anchoret, or an abſtemious recluſe perſon.

To deſperation turn my truſt and hope!
An anchor's cheer in priſon be my ſcope! Shakeſp.

A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. ſ. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or faſtneſs of the anchor; and, figuratively, ſecurity.

The old Engliſh could expreſs moſt aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for example: the holy ſervice of God, which the Latins called religion, becauſe it knitted the minds of men together, and moſt people of Europe have borrowed the ſame from them, they called moſt ſignificantly ean-faſtneſs, as the one and only aſſurance and faſt anchor-hold of our ſouls health. Camden.

A'NCHOR-SMITH. n. ſ. [from anchor and ſmith.] The maker or forger of anchors.

Smithing comprehends all trades which uſe either forge or file, from the anchor-ſmith to the watchmaker; they all working by the ſame rules, though not with equal exactneſs, and all uſing the ſame tools, though of ſeveral ſizes. Moxon.

A'NCHORAGE. n. ſ. [from anchor.] 1. The hold of the anchor. 2. The ſet of anchors belonging to a ſhip. 3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

(1.) Let me reſolve whether there be indeed ſuch efficacy in nurture and firſt production; for if that ſuppoſal ſhould fail us, all our anchorage were looſe, and we ſhould but wander in a wild ſea. Wotton.

(2.) The bark that hath diſcharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at firſt ſhe weigh'd her anchorage. Shakeſp.

A'NCHORED. participial adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.

Like a well twiſted cable, holding faſt
The anchor'd veſſel in the loudeſt blaſt. Waller.

A'NCHORET. } n. ſ. [contracted from anachoret, ἀναχωρήτης.]
A'NCHORITE. } A recluſe; a hermit; one that retires to the more ſevere duties of religion.

His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himſelf. Sprat.

You deſcribe ſo well your hermitical ſtate of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine ſpring, or any of the accommodations that befit a ſolitary life. Pope.

ANCHO'VY. n. ſ. [from anchova, Span. or anchioe, Ital. of the ſame ſignification.] A little ſea-fiſh, much uſed by way of ſauce, or ſeaſoning. Scaliger deſcribes the anchovy as of the herring kind, about the length of a finger, having a pointed ſnout, a wide mouth, no teeth, but gums as rough as a ſaw. Others make it a ſort of ſardine, or pilchard; but others, with better reaſon, hold it a peculiar ſpecies, very different from either. The fiſhing is chiefly in the night-time; when a light being put on the ſtern of their little fiſhing veſſels, the anchovies flock round, and are caught in nets. Savary.

We invent new ſauces and pickles, which reſemble the animal ferment in taſte and virtue, as the ſalſo-acid gravies of meat; the ſalt pickles of fiſh, anchovies, oyſters. Floyer.

A'NCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.] 1. Old; that happened long ſince; of old time; not modern. Ancient and old are diſtinguiſhed; old relates to the duration of the thing itſelf, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dreſs, a habit uſed in former times. But this is not always obſerved; for we mention old cuſtoms; but though old be ſometimes oppoſed to modern, ancient is ſeldom oppoſed to new but when new means modern. 2. Old; that has been of long duration. 3. Paſt; former.

(1.) Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conqueror's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common perſons, he cauſed to be written in a book, after a ſurvey made of them, now remaining in the exchequer, and called doomſday book; and ſuch as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demeſnes. Cowell.

(2.) With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of days underſtanding. Job, xii. 12.

Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the moſt ancient, becauſe he never had any beginning. Raleigh.

———Induſtry
Gave the tall ancient foreſt to his axe. Thomſon.

(3.) I ſee thy fury: if I longer ſtay,
We ſhall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakeſp.

A'NCIENT. n. ſ. [from ancient, adj.] 1. Thoſe that lived in old time were called ancients, oppoſed to the moderns. 2. Senior; not in uſe.

(1.) And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings diſpenſe with laws themſelves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you muſt offend
Againſt the precept, ne'er tranſgreſs its end. Pope.

(2.) He toucheth it as a ſpecial pre-eminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in chriſtianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

A'NCIENT. n. ſ. 1. The flag or ſtreamer of a ſhip, and, formerly, of a regiment. 2. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Piſtol; whence in preſent uſe, enſign.

(2.) This is Othello's ancient, as I take it,
The ſame indeed, a very valiant fellow. Shakeſp.

A'NCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

Trebiſond anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjuſtly poſſeſſed, and as unjuſtly abuſed, by thoſe who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney.

The colewort is not an enemy, though that were anciently received, to the vine only; but to any other plant, becauſe it draweth ſtrongly the fatteſt juice of the earth. Bacon.

A'NCIENTNESS. n. ſ. [from ancient.] Antiquity; exiſtence from old times.

The Feſcenine and Saturnian were the ſame; they were called Saturnian from their ancientneſs, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden.

A'NCIENTRY. n. ſ. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the moſt mingled, and moſt uncertain. Wherefore, moſt fooliſhly do the Iriſh think to ennoble themſelves, by wreſting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himſelf from any in certain. Spenſer on Ireland.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, ſtealing, fighting. Shakeſp.

ANCLE. See ANKLE.

A'NCONY. n. ſ. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two ſquare rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.

AND. conjunction. 1. The particle by which ſentences or terms are joined, which it is not eaſy to explain by any ſynonimous word. 2. And ſometimes ſignifies though, and ſeems a contraction of and if. 3. In and if, the and is redundant and is omitted by all latter writers.

(1.) ———————Sure his honeſty
Got him ſmall gains, but ſhameleſs flattery
And filthy beverage, and unſeemly thift,
And borrow baſe, and ſome good lady's gift. Spenſer.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.

The Danes unconquer'd offſpring march behind;
And Morini, the laſt of human kind. Dryden.

It ſhall ever be my ſtudy to make diſcoveries of this nature in human life, and to ſettle the proper diſtinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and thoſe falſe colours and reſemblances of them that ſhine alike in the eyes of the vulgar. Addiſon.

(2.) It is the nature of extreme ſelf-lovers, as they will ſet an houſe on fire, and it were but to roaſt their eggs. Bacon.

(3.) I pray thee, Launce, an' if thou ſeeſt my boy,
Bid him make haſte. Shakeſp. Two Gent. of Verona.

A'NDIRON. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may ſupply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the ſpit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.

If you ſtrike an entire body, as an andiron of braſs, at the top, it maketh a more treble ſound, and at the bottom a baſer. Bacon.

ANDRO'GYNAL. adj. [from ἀνὴρ and γυνή.] Having two ſexes; hermaphroditical.

ANDRO'GYNALLY. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of hermaphrodites; with two ſexes.

The examples hereof have undergone no real or new tranſexion, but were androgynally born, and under ſome kind of hermaphrodites. Brown's Vulg. Err.

ANDRO'GYNOUS. adj. The ſame with androgynal.

ANDRO'GYNUS. n. ſ. [See ANDROGYNAL.] An hermaphrodite; one that is of both ſexes.

(1.) Some modern anecdotes aver,
He nodded in his elbow chair. Prior.

ANEMO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and γράφω.] The deſcription of the winds.

ANEMO'METER. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and μέτρον.] An inſtrument contrived to meaſure the ſtrength or velocity of the wind.

ANE'MONE. n. ſ. [ἀνεμώνη.] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its ſingle ſtalk, ſurrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many ſtamina in the center; the ſeeds are collected into an oblong head, and ſurrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemonies, are white, red, blue, and purple ſometimes curiouſly intermixed. Miller.

Wind flowers are diſtinguiſhed into thoſe with broad and hard leaves, and thoſe with narrow and ſoft ones. The broad leaved anemony roots ſhould be planted about the end of September. Theſe with ſmall leaves muſt not be put into the ground till the end of October. Mortimer.

From the ſoft wing of vernal breezes ſhed,
Anemonies, auriculas, enrich'd
With ſhining meal o'er all their velvet leaves. Thomſon.

A'NEMOSCOPE. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and σκόπος.] A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been obſerved, that hygroſcopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoſcopes, ſeldom failing, by the turning the index about, to foretel the ſhifting of the wind. Chambers.

ANE'NT. prep. A word uſed in the Scotch dialect. 1 Concerning; about; as, he ſaid nothing anent this particular. 2. Over againſt; oppoſite to; as, he lives anent the market-houſe.

To ANIMADVE'RT. v. n. [animadverto, Lat.] 1. To paſs cenſures upon. 2. To inflict puniſhments. In both ſenſes with the particle upon.

(1.) I ſhould not animadvert on him, who was a painful obſerver of the decorum of the ſtage, if he had not uſed extreme ſeverity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakeſpeare. Dryden.

(2.) If the Authour of the univerſe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher ſtate of being? Grew.

ANIMADVE'RTER. n. ſ. [from animadvert.] He that paſſes cenſures, or inflicts puniſhments.

God is a strict obſerver of, and a ſevere animadverter upon, ſuch as preſume to partake of thoſe myſteries, without ſuch a preparation. South.

A'NIMAL. n. ſ. [animal, Lat.] 1. A living creature corporeal, diſtinct, on the one ſide, from pure ſpirit; on the other, from mere matter. 2. By way of contempt, we ſay of a ſtupid man, that he is a ſtupid animal.

(1.) Animals are ſuch beings, which, beſides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed alſo with ſenſation and ſpontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives two ſchemes of tables of them.

Animals are either
- Sanguineous, that is, ſuch as have blood, which breathe either by.
  - Lungs, having either
    - Two ventricles in their heart, and thoſe either
      - Viviparous,
        - Aquatick, as the whale kind,
        - Terreſtrial, as quadrupeds;
      - Oviparous, as birds.
    - But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoiſes, and ſerpents.
  - Gills, as all ſanguineous fiſhes, except the whale kind.
- Exſanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into
  - Greater, and thoſe either,
    - Naked,
      - Terreſtrial, as naked ſnails,
      - Aquatick, as the poulp, cuttle-fiſh, &c.
    - Covered with a tegument, either
      - Cruſtaceous, as lobſters and crab-fiſh.
      - Teſtaceous, either
        - Univalve, as limpets;
        - Bivalve, as oyſters, muſcles, cockles;
        - Turbinate, as periwinkles, ſnails, &c.
  - Leſſer, as inſects of all ſorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either
- Hoofed, which are either
  - Whole-footed or hoofed, as the horſe and aſs;
  - Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into
    - Two principal parts, called biſulca, either
      - Such as chew not the cud, as ſwine;
      - Ruminant, or ſuch as chew the cud; divided into
        - Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.
          - Beef-kind,
          - Sheep-kind,
          - Goat-kind.
        - Such as have ſolid, branched and deciduous horns, as the deer-kind.
    - Four parts, or quadriſulca, as the hinoceros and hippopotamus.
- Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into
  - Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel kind;
  - Many toes or claws; either
    - Undivided, as the elephant;
    - Divided, which have either
      - Broad nails, and an human ſhape, as apes;
      - Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in reſpect of their teeth, are divided into ſuch as have

- Many fore-teeth, or cutters in each jaw;
  - The greater, which have
    - A ſhorter ſnout and rounder head, as the cat-kind;
    - A longer ſnout and head, as the dog-kind.
  - The leſſer, the vermin or weazel kind.
- Only two large and remarkable fore-teeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare kind. Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the ſame ſpecifick gravity with the animal juices, and as conſiſting of the ſame parts with animal ſubſtances, ſpirit, water, ſalt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the ſap they derive from the earth. Arbuth. on Alim.

Some of the animated ſubſtances have various organical or inſtrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a ſpring of life within themſelves, as beaſts, birds, fiſhes, and inſects; theſe are called animals. Other animated ſubſtances are called vegetables, which have within themſelves the principles of another ſort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, ſuch as we ſee in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts's Logick.

A'NIMAL. adj. [animalis, Lat.] 1. That which belongs or relates to animals. 2. Animal functions, diſtinguiſhed from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind, as, the will, memory, and imagination. 3. Animal life is oppoſed, on one ſide, to intellectual, and, on the other, to vegetable. 4. Animal is uſed in oppoſition to ſpiritual or rational; as, the animal nature.

(1.) There are things in the world of ſpirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confuſed; ſuch as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converſe with each other. Watts's Logick.

ANIMA'LCULE. n. ſ. [animalculum, Lat.] A ſmall animal; particularly thoſe which are in their firſt and ſmalleſt ſtate.

We are to know, that they all come of the ſeed of animalcules of their own kind, that were before laid there. Ray.

ANIMA'LITY. n. ſ. [from animal.] The ſtate of animal exiſtence.

The word animal firſt only ſignifies human animality. In the minor propoſition, the word animal, for the ſame reaſon, ſignifies the animality of a gooſe: thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the concluſion upon. Watts.

To A'NIMATE. v. a. [animo, Lat.] 1. To quicken; to make alive; to give life to: as, the ſoul animates the body; man muſt have been animated by a higher power. 2. To give powers to; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing. 3. To encourage; to incite.

(2.) But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,
And the mute ſtrings with vocal ſouls inſpire;
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaſte Diana bathing in the ſtream;
None can record their heav'nly praiſe ſo well
As Helen, in whoſe eyes ten thouſand Cupids dwell. Dryd.

(3.) The more to animate the people, he ſtood on high, from whence he might be beſt heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Knolles.

He was animated to expect the papacy, by the prediction of a ſoothſayer, that one ſhould ſucceed Pope Leo, whoſe name ſhould be Adrian. Bacon.

A'NIMATE. adj. [from To animate.] Alive; poſſeſſing animal life

All bodies have ſpirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main differences between animate and inanimate, are two: the firſt is, that the ſpirit of things animate are all contained within themſelves, and are branched in veins and ſecret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the ſpirits have not only branches, but certain cells or ſeats, where the principal ſpirits do reſide, and whereunto the reſt do reſort: but the ſpirits in things inanimate are ſhut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in ſnow. Bacon.

——Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, ſenſe, reaſon, all ſumm'd up in man. Milt.

There are ſeveral topicks uſed againſt atheiſm and idolatry; ſuch as the viſible marks of divine wiſdom and goodneſs in the works of the creation, the vital union of ſouls with matter, and the admirable ſtructure of animate bodies. Bentley.

A'NIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively; vigorous.

Warriours ſhe fires with animated ſounds;
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

A'NIMATENESS. n. ſ. [from animate.] The ſtate of being animated. Dict.

ANIMA'TION. n. ſ. [from animate.] 1. The act of animating or enlivening. 2. The ſtate of being enlivened.

(1.) Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the firſt producat, which is the word of animation. Bacon.

(2.) Two general motions in all animation are its beginning and encreaſe; and two more to run through its ſtate and declination. Brown's Vulg. Err.

A'NIMATIVE. adj. [from animate.] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMA'TOR. n. ſ. [from animate.] That which gives life; or any thing analogous to life, as motion.

Thoſe bodies being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impreſſions of their motor, and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themſelves to ſituations, wherein they beſt unite to their animator. Brown.

ANIMO'SE. adj. [animoſitas, Lat.] Full of ſpirit; hot; vehement. Dict.

ANIMO'SENESS. n. ſ. [from animoſe.] Spirit; heat; vehemence of temper. Dict.

ANIMO'SITY. n. ſ. [animoſitas, Lat.] Vehemence of hatred; paſſionate malignity. It implies rather the diſpoſition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itſelf.

They were ſure to bring paſſion, animoſity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence ſoever they had from others. Clarendon.

If there is not ſome method found out for allaying theſe heats and animoſities among the fair ſex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Addiſon.

No religious ſect ever carried their averſions for each other to greater heights than our ſtate parties have done: who, the more to inflame their paſſions, have mixed religious and civil animoſities together; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift.

A'NISE. n. ſ. [aniſum, Lat.] A ſpecies of apium or parſley with large ſweet ſcented ſeeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for uſe, becauſe the ſeeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

Ye pay the tythe of mint, and aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxiii. 23.

A'NKER. n. ſ. [ancker, Dut.] A liquid meaſure chiefly uſed at Amſterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two ſtekans; each ſtekan conſiſts of ſixteen mengles; the mengle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chambers.

A'NKLE. n. ſ. [ancleop, Sax. anckel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much ſwelled and ulcerated on the inſide, in ſeveral places. Wiſeman.

My ſimple ſyſtem ſhall ſuppoſe,
That Alma enters at the toes;
That then ſhe mounts by juſt degrees
Up to the ankles, legs and knees. Prior.

A'NKLE-BONE. n. ſ. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle.

The ſhin-bone, from the knee to the inſtep, is made by ſhadowing one half of the leg with a ſingle ſhadow, the ankle-bone will ſhew itſelf by a ſhadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacham.

A'NNALIST. n. ſ. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

Their own annaliſt has given the ſame title to that of Syrmium. Atterbury.

A'NNALS. n. ſ. without ſingular number. [annales, Lat.] Hiſtories digeſted in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate!
Through ſuch a train of woes if I ſhould run,
The day wou'd ſooner than the tale be done! Dryden.

We are aſſured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumſtances of diſtreſs, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers.

A'NNATS. n. ſ. without ſingular. [annates, Lat.] 1. Firſt fruits; becauſe the rate of firſt fruits paid of ſpiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cowell. 2. Maſſes ſaid in the Romiſh church for the ſpace of a year, or for any other time, either for the ſoul of a perſon deceaſed, or for the benefit of a perſon living. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To ANNE'AL. v. a. [ælan, to heat, Saxon.] 1. To heat glaſs, that the colours laid on it may pierce through. 2. To heat glaſs after it is blown, that it may not break. 3. To heat any thing in ſuch a manner as to give it the true temper.

(1.) But when thou doſt anneal in glaſs thy ſtory,
——then the light and glory
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win,
Which elſe ſhews watt'riſh, bleak, and thin. Herbert.

When you purpoſe to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven; or take a blue ſtone, which being made fit for the oven, lay it upon the croſs bars of iron. Peacham.

Which her own inward ſymmetry reveal'd,
And like a picture ſhone, in glaſs anneal'd. Dryden.

To ANNE'X. v. a. [annecto, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.] 1. To unite to at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will. 2. To unite; as, a ſmaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom. 3. To unite à poſteriori; annexion always preſuppoſing ſomething: thus we may ſay, puniſhment is annexed to guilt; but not guilt to puniſhment.

(3.) Concerning fate or deſtiny, the opinions of thoſe learned men, that have written thereof, may be ſafely received, had they not thereunto annexed and faſtened an inevitable neceſſity, and made it more general and univerſally powerful than it is. Raleigh.

——Nations will decline ſo low
From virtue, which is reaſon, that no wrong,
But juſtice, and ſome fatal curſe annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton.

I mean not the authority, which is annexed to your office; I ſpeak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your perſon. Dryden.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happineſs always to the exerciſe of it. Atterbury.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers.

ANNE'X. n. ſ. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; additament.

Failing in his firſt attempt to be but like the higheſt in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the ſame on earth, and hath accordingly aſſumed the annexes of divinity. Brown.

ANNEXA'TION. n. ſ. [from annex.] 1. Conjunction; addition. 2. Union; act or practice of adding or uniting.

(1.) If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedneſs, which Chriſt ſo vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promiſe, that the whole body will be full of light, Matt. vi. that all other chriſtian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond.

(2.) How annexations of benefices firſt came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great diſpute. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Anne'xion. n. ſ. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is neceſſary to engage the fears of men, by the annexion of ſuch penalties as will overbalance temporal pleaſure. Rogers.

Anne'xment. n. ſ. [from annex.] 1. The act of annexing. 2. The thing annexed.

(2.) ——————When it falls,
Each ſmall annexment, petty conſequence,
Attends the boiſt'rous ruin. Shakeſp.

Anni'hilable. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of exiſtence.

To ANNI'HILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.] 1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of exiſtence. 2. To deſtroy, ſo as to make the thing otherwiſe than it was. 3. To annul; to deſtroy the agency of any thing.

(1.) It is impoſſible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that as it was the work of the omnipotency of God, to make ſomewhat of nothing; ſo it requireth the like omnipotency to turn ſomewhat into nothing. Bacon.

Thou taught'ſt me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practiſe this one way, t' annihilate all three. Donne.

He deſpaired of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Whoſe friendſhip can ſtand againſt aſſaults, ſtrong enough to annihilate the friendſhip of puny minds; ſuch an one has reached true conſtancy. South.

Some imagined, water ſufficient to a deluge was created, and when the buſineſs was done, diſbanded, and annihilated. Woodward.

(2.) The flood that hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, ſo as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh.

(3.) There is no reaſon, that any one commonwealth ſhould annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

Annihila'tion. n. ſ. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The ſtate of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very eſſence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not chooſe but follow. Hooker.

That knowledge, which as ſpirits we obtain,
Is to be valu'd in the midſt of pain:
Annihilation were to loſe heav'n more:
We are not quite exil'd, where thought can ſoar. Dryden.

Annive'rsary. n. ſ. [anniverſarius, Lat.] 1. A day celebrated as it returns in the courſe of the year. 2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniverſary day. 3. Anniverſary is an office in the Romiſh church, celebrated not only once a-year, but which ought to be ſaid daily through the year, for the ſoul of the deceaſed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

(1.) For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive chriſtians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praiſe God for them, and to obſerve the anniverſary of their ſufferings. Stillingfleet.

(2.) Donne had never ſeen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniverſaries. Dryden.

Annive'rsary. adj. [anniverſarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, moſt conſtantly finiſhing its anniverſary viciſſitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worſhip to a creature, as inconſiſtent with chriſtianity; but confeſs the honour and eſteem for the martyrs, which they expreſſed by keeping their anniverſary days, and recommending their example. Stillingfleet.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the ſeventeen hundred and fifty-firſt year from the birth of our Saviour.

Anno'isance. n. ſ. [from annoy, but not now in uſe.] It hath a double ſignification. Any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river, or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or ſuch like means. The writ that is brought upon this tranſgreſſion. See Nusance, the word now uſed. Blount.

A'NNOLIS. n. ſ. An American animal like a lizard.

Annota'tion. n. ſ. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books; notes.

It might appear very improper to publiſh annotations, without the text itſelf whereunto they relate. Boyle.

Annota'tor. n. ſ. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a ſcholiaſt; a commentator.

I have not that reſpect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton on the Claſſicks.

To Anno'unce. v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.] 1. To publiſh; to proclaim. 2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial ſentence.

(1.) Of the Meſſiah I have heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length
Announc'd by Gabriel with the firſt I knew. Milton.

(2.) Thoſe, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations: publiſh laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

To ANNO'Y. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to teaze; to moleſt.

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys him;
He heaps in inward grief, that moſt deſtroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous preſence and ſweet company,
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealouſy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Queen.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houſes thick, and ſewers, annoy the air,
Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
Among the pleaſant villages, and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Inſects ſeldom uſe their offenſive weapons, unleſs provoked: let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray.

Anno'y. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Injury; moleſtation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, ſleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakeſp.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring leſs annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themſelves they cannot ſtay. Donne.

What then remains, but, after paſt annoy,
To take the good viciſſitude of joy. Dryden.

Anno'yance. n. ſ. [from annoy.] 1. That which annoys; that which hurts. 2. The ſtate of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

(1.) A grain, a duſt, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious ſenſe. Shakeſpeare.

Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer.

(2.) The ſpit venom of their poiſoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker.

The greateſt annoyance and diſturbance of mankind, has been from one of thoſe two things, force, or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terrour of any beſieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Wilkins.

Anno'yer. n. ſ. [from To annoy.] The perſon that annoys.

A'nnual. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.] 1. That which comes yearly. 2. That which is reckoned by the year. 3. That which laſts only a year.

(1.) Annual for me, the grape, the roſe, renew,
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope.

(2.) ——— The king's majeſty
Does purpoſe honour to you; to which
A thouſand pounds a-year, annual ſupport,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

(3.) The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annual, ſeemeth to be cauſed by the over-expence of the ſap; which being prevented, they will ſuperannuate, if they ſtand warm. Bacon.

Every tree may, in ſome ſenſe, be ſaid to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit, proceeding from the coat that was ſuperinduced over the wood the laſt year. Ray.

A'nnually. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it ſufficient to ſignify a heart; becauſe the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and unto fifty years annually encreaſeth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The whole ſtrength of a nation is the utmoſt that a prince can raiſe annually from his ſubjects. Swift.

Annu'itant. n. ſ. [from annuity.] He that poſſeſſes or receives an annuity.

ANNU'ITY. n. ſ. [annuité, Fr.] 1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have aſſets by deſcent. The ſecond difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity againſt the granter, his heirs, or ſucceſſors; but of a rent, the ſame actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for aſſets, becauſe it is no freehold in law; nor ſhall be put in execution upon a ſtatute merchant, ſtatute ſtaple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowell. 2. A yearly allowance.

(2.) He was generally known to be the ſon of one earl, and brother to another, who ſupplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To Annu'l. v. a. [from nullus.] 1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to aboliſh. 2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

(1.) That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and whoever deſtroys this authority, does, in effect, annul the law. Rogers.

(2.) Light the pure work of God to me's extinct,
And all her various objects of delight
Annull'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd. Milton.

A'nnular. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, riſe up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

A'nnulary. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

Becauſe continual reſpiration is neceſſary, the wind-pipe is made with annulary cartilages, that the ſides of it may not flag and fall together. Ray.

A'nnulet. n. ſ. [from annulus, Lat.] 1. A little ring. 2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of diſtinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms. 3. Annulets are alſo a part of the coat-armour of ſeveral families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and juriſdiction, it being the cuſtom of prelates to receive their inveſtiture per baculum & annulum. 4. [In architecture.] The ſmall ſquare members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets. 5. Annulet is alſo uſed for a narrow flat moulding common to other parts of the column; ſo called, becauſe it encompaſſes the column round. Chambers.

To ANNU'MERATE. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to ſomething beforementioned.

Annumera'tion. n. ſ. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

To ANNU'NCIATE. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate ſomething that has fallen out: a word not in popular uſe.

Annuncia'tion day. n. ſ. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's ſalutation of the bleſſed virgin; ſolemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our bleſſed Saviour: and ſo upon all the feſtivals of the year. Taylor.

A'nodyne. adj. [from α and ὀδύνη.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet durſt ſhe not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping ſtill the nobler parts were ſound:
But ſtrove with anodynes t' aſſuage the ſmart,
And mildly thus her med'cine did impart. Dryden.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain of the alimentary kind, are ſuch things as relax the tenſion of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient ſubſtances; thoſe things which deſtroy the particular acrimony which occaſions the pain, or what deadens the ſenſation of the brain, by procuring ſleep. Arbuthnot.

To ANO'INT. v. a. [oindre, enoindre; part. oint, enoint, Fr.] 1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as, oil, or unguents. 2. To ſmear; to be rubbed upon. 3. To conſecrate by unction.

(1.) Anointed let me be with deadly venom. Shakeſp.

Thou ſhalt have olive trees throughout all thy coaſts, but thou ſhalt not anoint thyſelf with the oil: for thine olive ſhall caſt his fruit. Deut. xxviii. 40.

(2.) Warm waters then in brazen caldrons borne,
Are pour'd to waſh his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the ſtiffen'd limbs anoint. Dryden.

(3.) ——— I would not ſee thy ſiſter,

Though antimonial cups prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages ſhould impart ;
This diſſipation, this profuſe expence,
Nor ſhrinks their ſize, nor waſtes their ſtores immenſe. Blackmore.

A'NTIMONY. n. ſ. [The ſtibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called ςίμμι. The reaſon of its modern denomination is referred to Baſil Valentine, a German monk ; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown ſome of it to the hogs, obſerved, that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened ; and therefore, he imagined, his fellow monks would be the better for a like doſe. The experiment, however, ſucceeded ſo ill, that they all died of it ; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine ; antimonk.]

Antimony is a mineral ſubſtance, of a metalline nature, having all the ſeeming characters of a real metal, except malleability ; and may be called a ſemimetal, being a foſſile glebe of ſome undetermined metal, combined with a ſulphurous and ſtony ſubſtance. Mines of all metals afford it ; that in gold mines is reckoned beſt. It has alſo its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. Its texture is full of little ſhining veins or threads, like needles ; brittle as glaſs. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony ; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuſes in the fire, though with ſome difficulty ; and diſſolves more eaſily in water. It deſtroys and diſſipates all metals fuſed with it, except gold ; and is therefore uſeful in refining. It is a common ingredient in ſpeculums, or burning concaves ; ſerving to give them a finer poliſh. It makes a part in bell metal ; and renders the ſound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and ſound ; and with lead, in the caſting of printers letters, to render them more ſmooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and eſpecially in caſting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is uſed under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. Chambers.

Such truth in love as th' antique world did know,
In ſuch a ſtyle as courts might boaſt of now. Waller.

(2.) The ſeals which we have remaining of Julius Cæſar, which we know to be antique, have the ſtar of Venus over them. Dryden.

My copper lamps at any rate,
For being too antique I bought;
Yet wiſely melted down my plate,
On modern models to be wrought;
And trifles I alike purſue,
Becauſe they're old, becauſe they're new. Prior.

(3.) Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And ſad habiliments right well beſeen. Fairy Qu.

Muſt he no more divert the tedious day?
Nor ſparkling thoughts in antique words convey?
Smith to the Memory of Philips.

(4.) Name not theſe living death-heads unto me;
For theſe not ancient but antique be. Donne.

And ſooner may a gulling weather-ſpy
By drawing forth heav'n's ſcheme, tell certainly
What faſhioned hats or ruffs, or ſuits next year,
Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Donne.

To APO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from apology.] 1. To plead in favour of any perſon or thing. 2. It has the particle for before the ſubject of apology.

(1.) It will be much more ſeaſonable to reform than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports thoſe, who dwell ſecure, to look about them. Decay of Piety.

(2.) I ought to apologize for my indiſcretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Preparation for Death.

The tranſlator needs not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood. Pope's Preface to Statius.

A'POLOGUE. n. ſ. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; ſtory contrived to teach ſome moral truth.

An apologue of Æſop is beyond a ſyllogiſm, and proverbs more powerful than demonſtration. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Some men are remarked for pleaſantneſs in raillery; others for apologues and appoſite diverting ſtories. Locke.

APO'LOGY. n. ſ. [apologia, Lat. ἀπολογία.] 1. Defence; excuſe. Apology generally ſignifies rather excuſe than vindication, and tends rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, ſometimes unregarded by writers. 2. It has for before the object of excuſe.

(1.)——————In her face excuſe
Came prologue; and apology too prompt;
Which with bland words at will ſhe thus addreſs'd. Milton.

(2.) It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem: ſome will think it needs no excuſe, and others will receive none. Dryden.

I ſhall neither trouble the reader, nor myſelf, with any apology for publiſhing of theſe ſermons; for if they be, in any meaſure, truly ſerviceable to the end for which they are deſigned, I do not ſee what apology is neceſſary; and if they be not ſo, I am ſure none can be ſufficient. Tillotſon.

APOMECO'METRY. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ, from, μῆκος, diſtance, and μετρέω, to meaſure.] The art of meaſuring things at a diſtance. Dict.

A lady was ſeized with an apoplectick fit, which afterward terminated in ſome kind of lethargy. Wiſeman.

A'POPLEX. n. ſ [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The laſt ſyllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

————Preſent puniſhment purſues his maw,
When ſurfeited and ſwell'd, the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, inteſtate death. Dryden.

A'POPLEXED. adj. [from apoplex.] Seized with an apoplexy.

——————Senſe, ſure, you have,
Elſe could you not have motion: but ſure that ſenſe
Is apoplex'd. Shakeſp.

A'POPLEXY. n. ſ. [ἀπόπληξις.] A ſudden deprivation of all internal and external ſenſation, and of all motion, unleſs of the heart and thorax. The cauſe is generally a repletion, and indicates evacuation, joined with ſtimuli. Quincy.

Apoplexy is a ſudden abolition of all the ſenſes, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the ſtoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal ſpirits through the nerves deſtined for thoſe motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, mulled, deaf, ſleepy, inſenſible. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

A fever may take away my reaſon, or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither ſenſe nor underſtanding. Locke.

APO'RIA. n. ſ. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetorick, by which the ſpeaker ſhews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to ſay in ſome ſtrange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the caſe with himſelf. Thus Cicero ſays, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a harlot more laſciviouſly, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more preſumptuouſly, I cannot well declare. Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHOE'A. n. ſ. [ἀποῤῥόιη.] Effluvium; emanation; ſomething emitted by another: not in uſe.

The reaſon of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhœas, which paſſing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the ſalve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville's Scepſis.

APOSIOPE'SIS. n. ſ [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπὸ, after, and σιώπαω, to be ſilent.] A form of ſpeech, by which the ſpeaker, through ſome affection, as ſorrow, baſhfulneſs, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his ſpeech before it be all ended. A figure, when ſpeaking of a thing, we yet ſeem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the courſe of the ſentence begun is ſo ſtayed, as thereby ſome part of the ſentence not being uttered, may be underſtood. Smith's Rhetorick.

APO'STASY. n. ſ. [ἀπόστασις.] Departure from what a man has profeſſed: It is generally applied to religion; ſometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apoſtaſy to be a wilful departure from that ſtate of faith, which any perſon has profeſſed himſelf to hold in the chriſtian church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware

Apoſtaſy, by what befel in heav'n
To thoſe apoſtates. Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedneſs, but apoſtaſy, degenerate wickedneſs. Sprat.

Whoever do give different worſhips, muſt bring in more gods; which is an apoſtaſy from one God. Stillingfleet.

APO'STATE. n. ſ. [apoſtata, Lat. ἀποστάτης.] One that has forſaken his profeſſion; generally applied to one that has left his religion.

The angels, for diſobedience, thou haſt reſerved to a miſerable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apoſtate from thee and goodneſs, thou haſt given a Saviour. Rogers's Sermons.

Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye! Shakſp. Midſum. Night's Dream.

(3.) Bleſt ſeraphims ſhall leave their quire,
And turn love's ſoldiers upon thee,
To exerciſe their archery. Craſhaw's Steps to Temple.

Say from what golden quivers of the ſky
Do all thy winged arrows fly?
Swiftneſs and power by birth are thine.
'Tis I believe this archery to ſhew,
That ſo much coſt in colours thou,
And ſkill in painting, doſt beſtow
Upon thy ancient arms the gaudy heav'nly bow. Cowley.

A'RCHES-COURT. n. ſ. [from arches and court.] The chief and moſt ancient conſiſtory that belongs to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the debating of ſpiritual cauſes, ſo called from Bow-church in London, where it is kept, whoſe top is raiſed of ſtone pillars, built arch-wiſe. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, becauſe with this office is commonly joined a peculiar juriſdiction of thirteen pariſhes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the biſhop of London, and belonging to the archbiſhop of Canterbury; of which the pariſh of Bow is one. Some others ſay, that he was firſt called dean of the arches, becauſe the official to the archbiſhop, the dean of the arches, was his ſubſtitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The juriſdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: ſo that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cauſe, ſends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made. Cowel.

A'RCHETYPE. n. ſ. [archetypum, Lat.] The original of which any reſemblance is made.

Our ſouls, though they might have perceived images themſelves by ſimple ſenſe; yet it ſeems inconceivable, how they ſhould apprehend their archetypes. Glanville's Scepſis.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas; ſo our ſenſations of hunger, cold, are alſo inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of theſe things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts's Logick.

ARCHE'TYPAL. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's opticks I have ſeen
Him who is fairer than the ſons of men:
The ſource of good, the light archetypal. Norris.

ARCHE'US. n. ſ. [probably from ἄρχος.] A word by which Paracelſus ſeems to have meant a power that preſides over the animal œconomy, diſtinct from the rational ſoul.

ARCHIDIA'CONAL. adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be cenſured in an archidiaconal viſitation.

ARCHIEPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from archiepiſcopus, Lat. an archbiſhop.] Belonging to an archbiſhop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiſcopal ſee; the ſuffragans are ſubject to archiepiſcopal juriſdiction.

A'RCHITECT. n. ſ. [architectus, Lat.] 1. A profeſſor of the art of building. 2. A contriver of a building; a builder. 3. The contriver or former of any compound body. 4. The contriver of any thing.

(1.) The architect's glory conſiſts in the deſignment and idea of the work; his ambition ſhould be to make the form triumph over the matter. Wotton.

(2.) ——— The haſty multitude
Admiring enter'd, and the work ſome praiſe,
And ſome the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'red ſtructure high,
Where ſcepter'd angels held their reſidence,
And ſat as princes. Milton.

(3.) This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated. Ray on the Creation.

(4.) ——— An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of theſe woes. Shakeſp.

ARCHITE'CTIVE. adj. [from architect.] That performs the work of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the laſt mentioned, be furniſhed with architective materials? Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἄρχος, chief, and τέκτων, an artificer.] That which has the power or ſkill of an architect; that which can build or form any thing.

To ſay that ſome more fine part of either, or all the hypoſtatical principle, is the architect of this elaborate ſtructure, is to give occaſion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick ſpirit, and what agent made ſo ſkilful and happy a mixture. Boyle.

ARCHITE'CTURE. n. ſ. [architectura, Lat.] 1. The art or ſcience of building. 2. The effect or performance of the ſcience of building.

(1.) Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, beſides building of ſhips and veſſels, includes alſo ports, moles, docks, &c. Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture ſkill'd,
Cities for uſe, and forts for ſafety build:
Then palaces and lofty domes aroſe,
Theſe for devotion, and for pleaſure thoſe. Blackmore.

(2.) The formation of the firſt earth being a piece of divine architecture, aſcribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theory.

A'RCHITRAVE. n. ſ. [from ἀρχὴ, chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; becauſe it is ſuppoſed to repreſent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the loweſt member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is ſometimes called the reaſon piece, or maſter beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloiſters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron. Builders Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; through the lightneſs whereof the architrave could not ſuffer, nor the column itſelf, being ſo ſubſtantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Weſtward a pompous frontiſpiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And ſculpture riſing on the roughen'd gold. Pope.

A'RCHIVES. n. ſ. without a ſingular. [archiva, Lat.] The places where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps ſometimes uſed for the writings themſelves.

Though we think our words vaniſh with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witneſſes either for or againſt us. Government of the Tongue.

I ſhall now only look a little into the Moſaick archives, to obſerve what they furniſh us with upon this ſubject. Woodward.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wiſe.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, ſo called ab arcuata eccleſia, or from Bow-church, by reaſon of the ſteeple or clochier thereof, raiſed at the top with ſtone pillars in faſhion of a bow bent archwiſe. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Diſconrſing on matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credulity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Humility it expreſſes by the ſtooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we ſay, toſſed up. Dryden's Du Freſnoy.

A'RROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.

Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the ſigniory therein, muſt be vain and arrogant. Spenſer on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and ſtates, is natural to popular governments. Temple.

A'RROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

———— Our poet may
Himſelf admire the fortune of his play;
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, becauſe he pleaſes you. Dryden.

———— Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of proweſs
Inherent, arrogantly thus preſum'd;
What if this ſword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave ſheer the execrable head
Of Churchill. Philips.

A'RROGANTNESS. n. ſ. [from arrogant.] The ſame with arrogance; which ſee. Dict.

To A'RROGATE. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjuſt claims only prompted by pride.

> But yet my nature could not bear it ſo. Shakeſp.

ARTE'RIAL. adj. [from artery.] That which relates to the artery; that which is contained in the artery.

> Had not the Maker wrought the ſpringy frame,
> The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
> Had cool'd and languiſh'd in the arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle paſſeth through the arterial tube, it is preſſed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward againſt the ſides of the tube, and the elaſtick force of the air, preſſing it on the oppoſite ſides of thoſe air-bladders; along the ſurface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀρτηρία, and τέμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in uſe among the French.

A'RTERY. n. ſ. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is compoſed of three coats; of which the firſt ſeems to be a thread of fine blood veſſels and nerves, for nouriſhing the coats of the artery; the ſecond is made up of circular, or rather ſpiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer ſtrata, according to the bigneſs of the artery. Theſe fibres have a ſtrong elaſticity, by which they contract themſelves with ſome force, when the power by which they have been ſtretched out ceaſes. The third and inmoſt coat is a fine tranſparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwiſe, upon the dilatation of an artery, would eaſily ſeparate the ſpiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow ſmaller, theſe coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins ſeem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elaſtic tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood ſtill forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

A'RTFUL. adj. [from art and full.] 1. Performed with art. 2. Artificial; not natural. 3. Cunning; ſkilful; dexterous.

(1.) The laſt of theſe was certainly the moſt eaſy, but, for the ſame reaſon the leaſt artful. Dryden.

> (3.) O ſtill the ſame, Ulyſſes, ſhe rejoin'd,
> In uſeful craft ſucceſsfully refin'd,
> Artful in ſpeech, in action and in mind. Pope.

A'RTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; ſkilfully; dexterouſly.

> The reſt in rank: Honoria chief in place,
> Was artfully contriv'd to ſet her face,
> To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dryden.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption. How irreſiſtibly muſt it prevail, when the ſeeds of it are artfully ſown, and induſtriouſly cultivated? Rogers.

A'RTFULNESS. n. ſ. [from artful.] 1. Skill. 2. Cunning.

(1.) Conſider with how much artfulneſs his bulk and ſituation is contrived, to have juſt matter to draw round him theſe maſſy bodies. Cheyne.

ARTHRI'TICK. } adj. [from arthritis.] 1. Gouty; re-
ARTHRI'TICAL. } lating to the gout. 2. Relating to joints.

(1.) Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diſeaſes. Arbuthnot.

(2.) Serpents, worms, and leaches, though ſome want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and by the motion of fibrous and muſculous parts, are able to make progreſſion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ARTHRI'TIS. n. ſ. [ἀρθρῖτις, from ἄρθρον, a joint.] Any diſtemper that affects the joints, but the gout particularly. Quincy.

A'RTICHOKE. n. ſ. [artichault, Fr.] This plant is very like the thiſtle, but hath large ſcaly heads ſhaped like the cone of the pine tree; the bottom of each ſcale, as alſo at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleſhy eatable ſubſtance. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the ſtalk, another to the fruit or ſeed, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritous, ſtimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'RTICHOKE of Jeruſalem. A ſpecies of ſun flower.

A'RTICK. adj. [It ſhould be written arctick, from ἄρκτικος.] Northern; under the bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like thoſe beyond the artick circle; for the ſun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown.

In the following example it is, contrary to cuſtom, ſpelt after the French manner, and accented on the laſt ſyllable.

To you who live in chill degree,
As map informs, of fifty-three,
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty-one,
Methinks all climes ſhould be alike,
From tropick e'en to pole artique. Dryden.

A'RTICLE. n. ſ. [articulus, Lat.] 1. A part of ſpeech, as, the, an; the man, an ox. 2. A ſingle clauſe of an account; a particular part of any complex thing. 3. Terms; ſtipulations. 4. Point of time; exact time.

(2.) Laws touching matters of order are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine not ſo. Hooker.

Have the ſummary of all our griefs,
When time ſhall ſerve to ſhew in articles. Shakeſp.

Many believe the article of remiſſion of ſins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwiſe than God intended it. Taylor's Holy Living.

All the precepts, promiſes, and threatenings of the goſpel will riſe up in judgment againſt us; and the articles of our faith will be ſo many articles of accuſation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, That we did not obey the goſpel which we profeſſed to believe; that we made confeſſion of the chriſtian faith, but lived like heathens. Tillotſon.

You have ſmall reaſon to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

(3.) I embrace theſe conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakeſp.

A'stral. adj. [from aſtrum, Lat.] Starry; relating to the ſtars.

Some aſtral forms I muſt invoke by pray'r,
Fram'd all of pureſt atoms of the air;
Not in their natures ſimply good or ill;
But moſt ſubſervient to bad ſpirits will. Dryden.

Astra'y. adv. [from a and ſtray.] Out of the right way.

May ſeem the wain was very evil led,
When ſuch an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not whether right he went, or elſe aſtray. Spenſ.

You run aſtray, for whilſt we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland. Spenſer on Ireland.

Like one that had been led aſtray
Through the heav'n's wide pathleſs way. Milton.

To ASTRI'CT. v. a. [aſtringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in oppoſition to relax: a word not ſo much uſed as conſtringe.

The ſolid parts were to be relaxed or aſtricted, as they let the humours paſs either in too ſmall or too great quantities. Arb. on Aliments.

Astri'ction. n. ſ. [aſtrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Aſtriction is in a ſubſtance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the ſame means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an aſtriction, but ſuch an aſtriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleaſing aſtriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them: and therefore ſuch aſtriction is found in things of a harſh taſte. Bacon.

Lenitive ſubſtances are proper for dry atrabilarian conſtitutions, who are ſubject to aſtriction of the belly and the piles. Arbuthn. on Diet.

Astri'ctive. adj. [from aſtrict.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Dict.

Astri'ctory. adj. [aſtrictorius, Lat.] Aſtringent; apt to bind. Dict.

Astri'de. adv. [from a and ſtride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aſide,
Their modeſty, and ride aſtride. Hudibras.

Astro'loger. n. ſ. [aſtrologus, Lat. from ἄστρον and λόγος.] 1. One that, ſuppoſing the influences of the ſtars to have a cauſal power, profeſſes to foretell or diſcover events depending on thoſe influences. 2. It was anciently uſed for one that underſtood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

(1.) Not unlike that which aſtrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aſpect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the ſtars, ſay the aſtrologers: on the organs of the body, ſay the naturaliſts; it is the particular gift of heaven, ſay the divines, both chriſtians and heathens. Dryden.

Aſtrologers, that future fates foreſhew. Pope.

I never heard a finer ſatire againſt lawyers, than that of aſtrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a ſuit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

(2.) A worthy aſtrologer, by perſpective glaſſes, hath found in the ſtars many things unknown to the ancients. Raleigh.

Astrolo'gian. n. ſ. [from aſtrology.] The ſame with aſtrologer.

The twelve houſes of heaven, in the form which aſtrologians uſe. Camden.

The ſtars, they ſay, cannot diſpoſe,
No more than can the aſtrologian. Hudibras.

Astrolo'gical. } adj. [from aſtrology.] 1. Profeſſing
Astrolo'gick. } aſtrology 2. Relating to aſtrology.

(1.) Some ſeem a little aſtrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No aſtrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been baniſh'd, or in chains. Dryden.

(2.) Aſtrological prayers ſeem to me to be built on as good reaſon as the predictions. Stillingfleet.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the aſtrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley.

Astrolo'gically. adv. [from aſtrology.] In an aſtrological manner.

To Astro'logize. v. n. [from aſtrology.] To practice aſtrology.

ASTRO'LOGY. n. ſ. [aſtrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the ſtars; an art now generally exploded, as irrational and falſe.

I know the learned think of the art of aſtrology, that the ſtars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

Astro'nomer. n. ſ. [from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a rule or law.] One that ſtudies the celeſtial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the aſtronomers ſpeak of, in the inferiour orbs. Bacon.

Aſtronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the ſun. Locke.

The old and new aſtronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

Astrono'mical. } adj. [from aſtronomy.] Belonging to Astrono'mick. } aſtronomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the ſun's progreſs through the zodiack, they regiſtrate and ſet them down in their aſtronomical canons. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Can he not paſs an aſtronomick line,
Or dreads the ſun th' imaginary ſign,
That he ſhould ne'er advance to either pole? Blackmore.

Astrono'mically. adv. [from aſtronomical.] In an aſtronomical manner.

ASTRO'NOMY. n. ſ. [ἀστρονομία, from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematical ſcience, teaching the knowledge of the celeſtial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, diſtances, periods, eclipſes, and order. Pythagoras taught that the earth and planets turn round the ſun, which ſtands immoveable in the center. From the time of Pythagoras, aſtronomy ſunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens brought it from Africa to Spain, and reſtored this ſcience to Europe. Chambers.

To this muſt be added the underſtanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and aſtronomy. Cowley.

A'stroscopy. n. ſ. [ἀστὴρ, a ſtar, and σκοπέω, to view.] Obſervation of the ſtars. Dict.

A'stro-theology. n. ſ. [from aſtrum, a ſtar, and theologia, divinity.] Divinity founded on the obſervation of the celeſtial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the ſun, I ſhew in the preface of my Aſtro-Theology. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

Asu'nder. adv. [aꞅunꝺꞃan, Sax.] Apart; ſeparately; not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go aſunder. Spenſer on Ireland.

Senſe thinks the planet ſpheres not much aſunder,
What tells us then their diſtance is ſo far? Davies.

——————Greedy hope to find
His wiſh, and beſt advantage, us aſunder. Paradiſe Loſt.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our ſtate,
Seeks hid advantage to betray us worſe;
Which, when aſunder, will not prove too hard,
For both together are each other's guard. Dryden.

Borne far aſunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and ſteel they meet again. Dryd. Fab.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued aſunder, and in ſingle corpuſcles, and that which was amaſſed and concreted into nodules, ſubſided. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

Asy'lum. n. ſ. [Lat. ἄσυλον, from α, not, and συλέω, to pillage.] A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a ſanctuary; a refuge; a place of retreat and ſecurity.

So ſacred was the church to ſome, that it had the right of an aſylum, or ſanctuary. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Asy'mmetry. n. ſ. [from α, without, and συμμετρία, ſymmetry.] 1. Contrariety to ſymmetry; diſproportion. 2. This term is ſometimes uſed in mathematicks, for what is more uſually called incommenſurability; when between two quantities there is no common meaſure.

(1.) The aſymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time. Grew.

A'symptote. n. ſ. [from α, priv. σὺν, with, and πίπτω, to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Aſymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to ſome curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite diſtance. Chambers.

Aſymptote lines, though they may approach ſtill nearer together, till they are nearer than the leaſt aſſignable diſtance, yet, being ſtill produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew.

Asympto'tical. adj. [from aſymptote.] Curves are ſaid to be aſymptotical, when they continually approach, without a poſſibility of meeting.

ASY'NDETON. n. ſ. [ἀσύνδετον, of α, priv. and συνδέω, to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a ſentence; as in veni, vidi, vici, & is left out.

Bail. n. ſ. [Of this word the etymologiſts give many derivations; it ſeems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himſelf up in ſurety.]

Bail is the freeing or ſetting at liberty one arreſted or impriſoned upon action either civil or criminal, under ſecurity taken for his appearance. There is both common and ſpecial bail; common bail is in actions of ſmall prejudice, or ſlight proof, called common, becauſe any ſureties in that caſe are taken: whereas, upon cauſes of greater weight, or apparent ſpeciality, ſpecial bail or ſurety muſt be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainpriſe; for he that is mainpriſed, is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and cuſtody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in priſon at that time, or otherwiſe at their will. Cowel.

Worry'd with debts, and paſt all hopes of bail,
Th' unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roſcommon.

To Bait. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like eſtridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shakeſp.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till ſtrange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted ſimple modeſty. Shakeſp.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;

That is, to watch her as we watch theſe kites,
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shakeſp.

BAIT. n. ſ. [from the verb.] 1. Meat ſet to allure fiſh, or other animals, to a ſnare. 2. A temptation; an enticement; allurement. 3. A refreſhment on a journey.

As naturally grow miſcreants,
As barnacles turn Soland geeſe
In th' iſlands of the Orcades. Hudibras.

BARO'METER. n. ſ. [from βάρος, weight, and μέτρον, meaſure.] A machine for meaſuring the weight of the atmoſphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroſcope, which only ſhews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without ſpecifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, ſo called from Torricelli the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643 ; it is a glaſs tube filled with mercury, horizontally ſealed at one end ; the other open and immerged in a baſon of ſtagnant mercury ; ſo that, as the weight of the atmoſphere diminiſhes, the mercury in the tube will deſcend, and, as it increaſes, the mercury will aſcend ; the column of mercury ſuſpended in the tube, being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmoſphere. The meaſuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the ſea hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that eſſential property of the air, its gravity or preſſure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoiſed by a column of air of equal weight, ſo whatever cauſes make the air heavier or lighter, the preſſure of it will be thereby increaſed or leſſened, and of conſequence the mercury will riſe or fall. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoiſes a column of mercury from twenty-ſeven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmoſphere varying one tenth, which are its utmoſt limits ; ſo that the exact ſpecifick gravity of the air can be determined when the barometer ſtands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Air.

Barome'trical. adj [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical inſtruments. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

BA'RON. n. ſ. [The etomology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, ſignified a brave warriour, or a brutal man ; and, from the firſt of theſe ſignifications, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others ſuppoſe it originally to ſignify only a man ; in which ſenſe baron or varon, is ſtill uſed by the Spaniards ; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uſes baron and femme, huſband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gauliſh word, ſignifying commander ; others from the Hebrew נבר, of the ſame import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which ſeems leaſt probable.] 1. A degree of nobility next to a viſcount. It may be probably thought, that antiently, in England, all thoſe were called barons, that had ſuch ſigniories as we now call court barons. And it is ſaid, that, after the conqueſt, all ſuch came to the parliament, and ſat as nobles in the upper houſe. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with ſuch multitudes, it became a cuſtom, that none ſhould come, but ſuch as the king, for their extraordinary wiſdom or quality,, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men, ſeeing that this ſtate of nobility was but caſual, and depending merely on the prince's pleaſure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male: and theſe were called barons by letters patent, or by creation; whoſe poſterity are now thoſe barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleaſure. It is nevertheleſs thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be diſcerned by their titles; the barons by writ being thoſe, that to the title of lord have their own ſurnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent, are named by their baronies. Theſe barons which were firſt by writ, may now juſtly alſo be called barons by preſcription; for that they have continued barons, in themſelves and their anceſtors, beyond the memory of man. There are alſo barons by tenure, as the biſhops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their biſhopricks, have always had place in the upper houſe of parliament, and are called lords ſpiritual. 2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of theſe the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his aſſiſtants, between the king and his ſubjects, in cauſes of juſtice, belonging to the exchequer. 3. There are alſo barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the ſeven towns, Haſtings, Winchelſea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower houſe of parliament. Cowel. 4. Baron is uſed for the huſband in relation to his wife. Cowel. 5. A Baron of Beef is when the two ſirloins are not cut aſunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone. Dict.

BATH. n. ſ. [bað, Saxon.] 1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great eſteem with the ancients, eſpecially in complaints to be relieved by revulſion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and alſo in cutaneous caſes. But the modern practice has greateſt recourſe to the natural baths; moſt of which abound with a mineral ſulphur, as appears from their turning ſilver and copper blackiſh. The cold baths are the moſt convenient ſprings, or reſervatories, of cold water to waſh in, which the ancients had in great eſteem; and the preſent age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quinc. 2. A ſtate in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpoſe. 3. In chymiſtry, it generally ſignifies a veſſel of water, in which another is placed that requires a ſofter heat than the naked fire. Balneum Mariæ is a miſtake, for balneum maris, a ſea or water bath. A ſand heat is ſometimes called balneum ſiccum, or cinereum. Quincy. 4.
